

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE.

In presenting this History of Athletics at Princeton, we believe that we are publishing the most complete, comprehensive, and authoritative work which has ever been issued on the subject of college athletics.

The splendid and honorable achievements of Old Nassau in all branches of out-of-door sport, as herein recorded, warrants the highest enthusiasm of Princeton men everywhere. If this record of the contests which have passed, proves an inspiration to the students in the contests which are to come, the book will have largely served its purpose.

We desire to thank the Princeton men who have aided in the preparation of this book, by collection of data, loans of photographs, and reading of proof ; their number forbids individual acknowledgment. Special gratitude is due, however, to those who have contributed the special articles, and to the Graduate Advisory Committee ; in particular to Mr. C. C. Cuyler, '79, to whom, for his untiring and intelligent efforts in the field of intercollegiate sport, not only Princeton, but college athletics in America is deeply indebted.

INTRODUCTION.

I would much rather read this book than write the Introduction to it; for it is far easier to feel and recognize the Princeton Spirit in the records of athletic contests than to define and describe it in a prefatory way. But the choice is not left to me, and one thing at least the Princeton Spirit has always meant: when Princeton says to a son of hers, "Do this," he doeth it.

Athletic sports at Princeton practically began with the establishment of the college. But for many years they had an irregular development, a sort of wild, free growth, out of the impulse of young men of American stock toward vigorous physical exercise. The games most in vogue were handball, hockey, a rustic brand of baseball, and a primitive form of football,—all distinctly inferior sports, alike in their interest and in their value for bodily training. The faculty paid little attention to them, except by way of occasional discouragement toward hockey and encouragement toward handball,—the reasons for this discrimination being apparently philosophical.

The development of athletic sports in the modern sense of the word began about 1858, when L. W. Mudge, H. S. Butler, and Henry Sampson, three Brooklyn boys, organized the Nassau Baseball Club. The first concrete knowledge that I ever had of Princeton was in 1863, when, as a very little boy, I saw this nine inflict a crushing defeat upon the Excelsiors of Brooklyn. The Nassaus played good ball and behaved like gentlemen. At that time I discovered that Princeton was the college that I wanted to go to. Since then I have found many additional reasons, but as a matter of fact, in chronological order, that was the first.

There have been three successive steps in the advance of Princeton to her present position in athletics.

The first step represents the recognition by the undergraduates that in order to get the most good and pleasure and credit out of athletic sports they must organize and regulate their games. The students must do this for themselves. No one else can do it for them. So we may trace the growth of the spirit of order and responsibility and concerted effort on the part of the students, in the formation of the various clubs from 1860 to 1870; in the beginning of intercollegiate contests in 1864, when the first baseball game was won from Williams; in the organization of track athletics; and in the notable victories over Harvard at baseball and Yale at football in 1873, under the captaincy of Arthur Pell.

Meantime the second step in the orderly development had been taken. The faculty had begun to take an interest in athletics. The first thing that President McCosh asked for, when he came to Princeton, was a new gymnasium. The arrival of Mr. George Goldie as instructor marked the beginning of a new era in physical culture and out-of-door sports. No attempt was made to take the conduct of athletics out of the hands of the students; but it was recognized that they must be encouraged and guided to conduct them wisely. No unfit man must be allowed to misrepresent Princeton on the athletic field; but fit men must have every opportunity and advantage for the development of physical strength, skill, and prowess. I think that is a fair statement of Dr. McCosh's attitude toward athletics, and I think it still represents the position of the Princeton men who have anything to do with the subject from the faculty side.

The third step was the entrance of the alumni upon an active part in the direction of college athletics. From an early date they had been permitted to take a passive part—by making up deficits in the finances. In 1885 they were asked to form a Graduate Advisory Committee, to which certain definite powers were given. This committee has done an extraordinary amount of work. It has made the fine equipment of the various sports possible, and has corrected errors of judgment (arising from inexperience) which from time to time have crept into the athletic management. It has guarded against those fluctuations of interest, and those excesses of elation after victory and of depression after defeat, which are injurious to the cause of manly sports. Some of the best graduates of Princeton—like Van Rensselaer, '71; Paton, '74; Osborn, '77; Wilson, '79; Edwards, '85; and Harris, '86—have served on this committee. One of them, Mr. C. C. Cuyler, has been a member of it from the beginning until the present. He is also a Trustee of the University.

These three elements,—the faculty, guarding the honor of the University by insisting that fit men, bona fide students, shall represent it in the field of sports; the graduates, giving counsel, encouragement, and support in the management of the various athletic interests; the undergraduates, organizing and conducting their own games in a manly way, for mutual benefit and pleasure and for the credit of the University,—these three elements have controlled the development of athletics at Princeton.

Behind these three elements, fusing them into one more successfully than has been done in the history of any other American college, lies the Princeton Spirit.

Who can describe it precisely? Its results may be traced all through this book. It has given Princeton a place in the front rank in athletics, on a par with universities double her size. It has developed extraordinary individual athletes, of whom Earl Dodge, '79, may stand as a type, a healthy scholar, a muscular christian, a gentleman player, an ideal Princetonian. It has kept up the tradition of achievement in manly sports in families like the Manns, the Poes, the Wards, the Moffats, the Hodges, and the Pells, '73—'02. It has made Princeton "a good loser," taking her bad luck in good form and not rushing into the newspapers to claim a lost game. It has also made her a famous winner of apparently hopeless contests, as in the Yale-Princeton football match of 1899, and the baseball match between the same colleges in 1900. The latter was probably as dramatic a contest as has ever been seen in the intercollegiate field. For eight innings and a half Yale led with a score of 4—0. But Princeton lost neither temper nor nerve. The rocket cheer still rang from the "bleachers." The notes of "Old Nassau" echoed across the field. The nine played on, determined to—

—"argue not
Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a jot
Of heart or hope,"—

but to do their best as long as there was a fighting chance left. In the last half of the last inning those boys who "did not know when they were beaten" scored five runs without losing a man out; and then the whole field rose at them and carried them off in triumph. That was the Princeton Spirit.

This Preface is no place for a long preachment on the general subject of athletics, but certainly one has a right to say that games played in this spirit have a distinct educational value, for spectators as well as for players. The self-restraint which lies back of the training for such a contest; the habit of co-operation which discards "grandstand play" and makes the good work of the whole team the first object; the temper of steady resolution and indomitable hope which enables men to endure to the end and snatch victory from defeat,—these are good things to contemplate and imitate.

The aim of the American university is not merely the production of scholars, but the development of men. All of these men must pass through an intellectual discipline and come up to a standard of intelligence and work. The University is no place for men who will not or can not study. Neither is it a place for men to neglect their bodies, ruin their health, and become physical weaklings and incapables. It is a place where discipline and life must be adapted to the unfolding of a vigorous, active, well-balanced manhood. Mistakes are always possible, both on the physical and on the intellectual side. When they occur they must be corrected with prudence, justice, and firmness. There is no department of human life, so far as my experience goes, which is exempt from errors and evils.

But one thing is certain: no American university can prosper or do its work without athletics. The question is not whether we will have them, but how shall we best conduct them. To the solution of this problem I think the Princeton Spirit, with its co-operation of undergraduates, alumni, and faculty, has made a considerable contribution.

HENRY VAN DYKE, '73.

ATHLETICS AT PRINCETON.

The History of Athletics at Princeton is properly coextensive with the History of Princeton, but the records of the sports prior to the year 1860 are so meagre that this volume must deal with the athletics of Princeton after the establishment of intercollegiate sports. But even this limitation does not give a definite starting-point.

Shall we consider that intercollegiate athletics at Princeton began with the baseball game of Nov. 22, 1864, with Williams College, or the football game of Nov. 6, '69, with Rutgers, or the Regatta of '74, or the Football Association of '76, or the Baseball Association of '79? Perhaps this question is not important; but at any rate we leave it unanswered, and will briefly summarize all the available records, both of the outdoor life and sports of the older Princeton and of the later development of athletics down to the present time.

There was never a time when the students at Princeton did not have some form of outdoor exercise. The rural situation of the college limited the recreation of the students. There was none of the social life of a city to relieve the monotony of study. The wealthier students kept their saddleshorses and spent their free hours in galloping over the hills, sometimes in a mad race with a dinner as wager, but oftener to some old mansion in the neighborhood, where a glimpse of home life drove out the gloom and sent the boys back to their books with more vitality—and more wandering thoughts. But all the students appreciated unconsciously the beautiful walks, such, perhaps, as no other college enjoyed; to Stony Brook, to Rocky Hill, to Kingston, to the Aqueduct, through Potter's Woods, and sometimes farther, to New Brunswick, Hightstown, Bound Brook. Many an "old grad" can remember the windings of the Millstone River above the Aqueduct, so crooked that the paddler can never see more than one hundred feet ahead.

There was good shooting in the neighborhood; squirrels, pheasants, coons, foxes, and larger game on the wooded hills, quail and rabbits in the meadows, and ducks and woodcock in the marshes.

These pleasures, however, took so much time from study that before the eighteenth century closed the Faculty decided that

"No student shall keep for his use or pleasure any horse or riding beast; nor shall any student keep a dog or a gun or firearms and ammunition of any kind without express permission from the authorities of the college."

In reality the hours for study and for recitation were so long that almost all recreation had to be stolen. But no laws of the Faculty could keep jolly, good fellows from getting together. Sometimes they gathered in the corridors; oftener they would meet for a "spread" or "feed" in a room whose owners had received a package or a basket from home. On these occasions the "flowing bowl" was not always empty, despite the Faculty ordinance that prohibited the students from keeping or using liquors in their rooms. But, artificial or not, there were spirits there, and many a time the sturdy old walls resounded with jests and songs, until in 1794 the Faculty thought it best to order that "no hallooing, loud talking, whistling, jumping, or any other boisterous noise shall be permitted in the entries or rooms of the college at any time."

Twenty-five years later a new generation of students entered Princeton with stronger passions and less self-control; perhaps because they were children of the war, or perhaps because more Southern planters were sending their sons to Princeton for a glimpse of the world.

The rule concerning forbidden weapons was soon enlarged to include "any sword, dirk, sword-cane, or any deadly weapon whatever." This made less dangerous the frequent struggles between the students and the town "muckers." Some fellows, imbibing too freely, perhaps, would get into a row, and some one would run through the campus yelling "Nassau! Nassau!" Instantly every fellow would leap from his bed and rush half-clad to the rescue, to defend the college honor. These were real fights, resulting not only in torn clothes, bloody noses and sore heads, but often in fractures of the skull, broken limbs, and several times in the loss of life itself. Then in the early 'forties came those exciting manœuvres with Rutgers for the possession of the Cannon.

These escapades did not worry the Faculty as much as the fights among the students themselves. Severe punishment was threatened against "any student who shall quarrel with, insult, or abuse a fellow student or any person whatever." The real cause of all the fracas was that every student had decided political opinions which he was not content to let lie dormant as theories, but was ready to support even with his life. This same noble spirit which emptied Princeton of its students during the War of the Rebellion had led in earlier days to personal encounters. Potter's Woods became the scene of many duels, all of which were bloody, though few were fatal. Yet their very number was serious, and in 1819 the Faculty took drastic measures, making the following law:

"Any student convicted of sending or receiving a challenge to fight a duel, or who shall carry such challenge, or be a second in a duel, or in any wise aid or abet it, shall immediately be dismissed by the Faculty and as soon as practicable expelled by the Trustees."

Though this checked the duelling, the overflowing spirits of the fellows sought other channels, as the following law shows:

"No student shall possess or exhibit any indecent picture, nor purchase, or read in college any lascivious, impious, or irreligious books; and if any student shall be convicted thereof, or of lying, profaneness, drunkenness, theft, uncleanness, playing at unlawful games (such as cards, dice, and backgammon) or other gross immoralities or impieties, he shall be punished according to the nature or heinousness of the offence by admonition, public reprobation, dismissal, or expulsion from college."

This dissipation seemed to enervate the boys, and, instead of walking and galloping they began to drive for exercise and amusement. But even this was restrained, for no student could on any pretense, without permission from a college officer, go farther than two miles from college.

Such were the early Faculty rules for regulating the exercises of the students. We, who are accustomed to the perfect liberty and individual responsibility of student self-government, cannot refrain from pronouncing some of these laws absurd. They all indicate that the college authorities failed to understand the student. In fact it was not until the administration of Dr. McCosh that it was deemed necessary to consult the standpoint of the students upon matters of discipline. Those who have witnessed the various championship fires, the Spanish demonstration of '96, and the more recent Wild West Show, are inclined to think that no wide-awake student ought to be expected to observe the last part of the law of '60, which says:

"All blowing of horns by students, kindling of bonfires, and disorderly gatherings on the college grounds or elsewhere are strictly forbidden, and upon every occasion of open disorder the students are required to repair to their several rooms and to remain in them during the continuance of the disorder."

Even though the majority of the students of the latter half of the eighteenth century were in training for the ministry, they were as full of energy and spirits as the undergraduates of to-day, and they probably had many different games. We know of at least two. As early as 1761 they were playing ball, a form of town-ball or hand-ball. They made, however, the mistake of selecting the President's house as the wall against which to bat the ball. Sometimes, in the excitement of the game, they would make a false bat. Then crash! the ball would go through the window of the President's study, down, perhaps, on some half-dried, weighty manuscript. At first this meant only a scolding, but later it became so frequent an occurrence that the Trustees forbade the students to play there under penalty of five shillings.

Hand-ball continued to be popular for a hundred years, until it was forced to yield to baseball and football. It is perhaps the earliest sport that the college officially sanctioned, for in '49 the Faculty permitted a "hand-ball alley" to be built on the field between the present buildings of West College, Alexander and Witherspoon Halls. It was built of brick, about twenty feet high and thirty feet long, and was large enough for four sets of players. Gradually the interest in this game disappeared, though the wall remained standing until about the year 1870.

The second sport was introduced after the Revolutionary War, which depleted the college. During the slow, steady fight for permanent re-establishment of both country and college the students began to play "shinny" at the noon recess and in the early evening. Before the Cannon was taken to New Brunswick in the war of 1812, players used it as their "bucking" place, for it lay on the campus near the site of East College. But even earlier the records of the Faculty contain the following quaint notice:

Faculty met Nov. 26, 1787. It appearing that a play at present much practised by the small boys among the students and by the grammar scholars with balls and sticks, in the rear campus, the college, is in itself low and unbecoming gentlemen and students; and inasmuch as it is attended with great danger to the health by sudden alternate heats and colds; as it tends by accidents almost unavoidable in that play to disfiguring and maiming those who are engaged in it, for whose health and safety as well as improvement in study as far as depends on our own exertion, we are accountable to their parents and liable to be severely blamed by them; and inasmuch as there are many amusements both more honorable and more useful in which they are indulged, therefore the Faculty think it incumbent on them to prohibit the students and grammar scholars from using the place aforesaid.

By order of the Faculty,

JOHN WITHERSPOON,
JNO. W. VAN CLEVE,
Clerk.

We do not know just what were the "more honorable and more useful amusements" in which they were indulged. Perhaps Dr. Witherspoon was hinting that the fences on his farm at Tusculum needed repair, or that his wood-pile was diminishing too rapidly. For on some occasions at least, the Seniors—whether from invitation, or to curry favor or from a desire to benefit by the Doctor's conversation, or from the pure love of outdoor work, we know not—would go to Tusculum and accompany the Doctor to the hay-fields, where all pulled off their coats and helped to harvest the crop.

Although there were no intercollegiate football contests until the year '69, yet as early as '44 the quadrangle between East and West was the scene of many a battle, as an old Princetonian puts it:—

"The way we played football in 1844 was for some fellow who was interested to take up a subscription and buy a leather cover, then contract for beef-bladders, which were blown up by 'niggers' with quills, the leather cover laced, and then some fine winter evening the ball would be put in play at the Cannon. Everybody who chose to play joined in, in the waning winter light. There were dozens sometimes on each side, the damaged falling out rapidly. The goals were East and West College. The side who kicked to the wall won. It was only horse-play after all, and there were no elaborate preparations, which make the present college games so seemingly ridiculous to old fellows. There was only one inflexible rule—"You must not touch the ball with your hands. You must only kick." This to my mind is football. I think, on looking back, that we were physically rather better than those of the present day, although physical training and all that kind of thing was entirely unknown and undreamed of."

By '58 the game had developed, the sides were organized simply, and there were rules, though it was not the modern Rugby game, nor even the earlier "Association" game, but what an old "grad" calls "football as is football—the genuine kicking game, when the ball got the kicks instead of the players, and the ball must be kicked to the goal instead of being carried there at the risk of somebody's life." The ball was not the leather-covered, oblong Rugby ball, which was not introduced into college until the fall of '76, but a large, round, rubber ball, uncovered, such as is now called an "Association" ball. The rules of the game were few and about as elastic as the ball. Sometimes the ball would be placed in the middle of the ground near the old Cannon; then the temporary leaders at a given signal would rush up from each side and try to kick it—or the other's shins. But the commoner method was to gather about the Cannon and throw the ball up into the air. Once the game was started it was a free-for-all contest; each man kicked as often as he could and for all he was worth. "We did not in that archaic age kick for a place on the team or for a record or for glory, but for fun and for wholesome exercise, and we got them every time." Any number of fellows would play,—the more the merrier, so long as the contesting sides were nearly equally divided. Sometimes the whole college would turn out at noon hour or just before supper, usually dividing themselves into sides according to the initials of their names—the A—L's trying to kick the ball against West College and the M—Z's against East College.

At other times clubs or classes would meet, when the score would be kept by cutting tallies in the big old elms. These records have disappeared or can no longer be interpreted. Other records, however, remain. For instance: C. F. Hall, '60, was renowned as the strongest kicker; then W. A. Malloy, '60 and C. Higbee, '60.

A member of the class of '60 writes:

"For exercise we took an evening walk to Jugtown, or some other classic shade; in winter we skated on the canal if there was ice enough, and in summer we plunged into its 'pearly depths' for a swim. For fun (and we had to have a good deal of that, because there were no athletic contests and training for a safety-valve to exuberant youth and vigor) we had 'horn-sprees,' bon-fires, and war-dances around the big Cannon, besides many other things of equally intellectual and elevating character, which would require a large book to relate in a worthy and appropriate manner.

"Evening prayers were then held at five o'clock; and the invariable custom was for a large proportion of the students to walk until the supper hour, ordinarily by a promenade along the streets of Princeton or by a short stroll into the country. The ladies of the town also generally found it convenient to walk at that hour; for the students were then a more important factor in the social life of Princeton than in these later years. Accordingly, as one saw them on the streets, they were a much better dressed company than the modern squads of athletes—sweater-clad—who seem to regard fine clothes as a mark of effeminacy.

"An old graduate must be pardoned if he maintains that the public appearances of the student promenaders in the old days were the most attractive. And from his point of view the social life of the college seems then to have been less restricted and more genial. A Sophomore, or even a Freshman, could then wear a high hat, or carry a cane or walk in the company of a Senior, or belong to the same club, or join his lady friends in their evening stroll.

"Athletics surely have their use and place in college life, but one cannot but lament the way in which the athletic spirit seems to have suppressed the finer street manners and courtesies of the olden days."

In the fall of '57 there seemed to be an athletic awakening. A cricket-club was formed and at least two baseball clubs. The baseball game they played was the old "Connecticut game," unlike the present one. It was of this that an old "grad" writes:

"It was not the modern scientific game, but baseball, nevertheless, in its rudimentary stage. We made occasional records in this game, too, though they were never published. W. L. Rankin, '60, made one on the side of my head one day with a bat while I was catching behind him, by carelessly swinging around with bat extended after he had missed and I had caught the ball. The bat was probably of very soft wood, so I recovered."

The cricket-club yielded a great deal of fun, but never took part in any matches, because in all the college there were not twenty-two men sufficiently interested to play.

Baseball proper began in Princeton in the fall of '58, when L. W. Mudge, H. S. Butler, and H. Sampson entered the Freshman class. They had been playing on the Star Club of Brooklyn, and when they came to Princeton they brought their paraphernalia with them. Their enthusiasm soon induced the old Nassau Baseball Club to adopt the new game, and Mudge was chosen captain. The next year the interest had spread to the Seminary, where a team was organized, and many matches were played with the Nassaus. But it was not until the fall of '60 that the Nassaus played their first game out of Princeton. This was at Orange, and resulted in a draw on account of darkness, with the score 42—42.

There were about this same time other signs of a general athletic awakening; and perhaps the most important of all was the demand for a gymnasium. The Lit. made several pleas as early as the year '57, but it was not until April, '59, that the building was completed, half of the cost being paid by the Faculty. This was the first tangible evidence that the college authorities took any interest in the physical development of the students. Though there was no instructor in gymnastics, no classes, nor any thought of making attendance compulsory, yet it was so popular that had not the war intervened to break the continuity of the records we would probably refer to this as the birth or beginning of the present Princeton spirit—if such an indefinite though effective sentiment or energy can have a starting-point. The gym. continued to be more or less popular until it was set on fire and burned down in the summer of '65.

Its construction had been watched with impatience.

"While it was being built a few of us gathered one evening in front of North College, at the west end, and began jumping. The running long jump and the hop-step-and-jump seemed to be the favorites. At first there were a good many participants—as it was a 'free for-all' sport—and many spectators. After two or three evenings it seemed good to Dr. Maclean (so Dennis or Steve said), and therefore to us also, that we select some less conspicuous spot for digging up the campus with our heels. Accordingly we went over in front of old East College and resumed the contests there. It was a very spirited and determined battle for a long time. It was not the custom then to take measurements and to keep records of athletic feats, so that the very data that you are most anxious to have cannot be given. But I remember that the final battle was in the hop-skip-and-jump between my classmate, S. J. Humphries, '60, and myself (J. B. King, '60). Humphries was fully six feet tall, slender, straight as an Indian, and the most graceful jumper I ever saw. As we were not contending for prizes or records, but simply in friendly rivalry and for exercise, no one was limited to any number of trials, and therefore the contest between us two was continued for a long time—with frequent intervals of a few days for rest and recovery from lameness. The final hop-step-and-jump which Humphries did not equal, and on which he gave up the contest, was staked off by some of the students and measured. It was something over forty feet, but how much over I do not now remember. I have jumped over forty years in time since then, and the small matter of a few inches or space could easily escape me. If the distance was ever exceeded by anyone while I remained in college I was never informed of it. There were others who excelled in the standing broad jump and in the high jump, but I cannot recall their names. Vaulting with a pole was not practised to much extent, if at all.

"We used to jump a great deal with dumb-bells; both standing and running jumps. Higbee, '60, was chief. I never knew any one make less apparent effort. I remember seeing him clear thirteen feet four inches from the stand, and apparently he made no more effort than if he were jumping over a puddle in the road. Our favorite knock-out performance was to take twelve hops in succession, or forty jumps. Of the forty-jump performance (with closed heels) I can say that whoever lives through it may boast of a rubber abdomen.

"At this time there was some training in foot-racing, and occasionally some commendable exhibitions of speed, though no records were kept. But the very finest, most exciting contests in sprinting that we saw at Princeton forty years ago and never could be excelled anywhere, occurred usually at night, when John (the dear old saint!) Maclean took a hand at it. It was worth going a good way to see it, but generally we had to go a good way to win out."

In the fall of '59 boxing became the temporary fad. This was the year of the great Heenan-Sayers fight, and the boys at Princeton were especially interested in Heenan, the American, because he came from Benicia, Cal., the home of S. Woodbridge, '59. Nobody knew much of the manly art, however, though Heenan's trainer, Ottigrow, came to Princeton in the spring of '60 and gave some lessons.

During the spring of '60 an attempt was made to organize a crew, but luckily it was unsuccessful. It is rather difficult to account for this strange outburst of athletic energy in so many channels; it was due in part to the fact that the class of '60 contained a large number of men of decided athletic ability and inclinations, and with the spirit of true sportsmen. It was due in part also to the fact that other colleges had preceded Princeton in all these sports except baseball. Every new athletic undertaking could rely upon two arguments: the necessity of relaxation after study, and the progress made in other colleges.

Then came the Civil War, which called Princeton students away by the score to the ranks of both North and South. Those who remained played a little baseball and a little cricket, but no records of any contests, not even with the "Seminoles," can be found from the fall of '60 to the autumn of '62. By September, 1862, the few students in college had become used to the excitement of the war and settled down to regular life, which included some athletics. The Nassau Baseball Club played two games with the Stars of New Brunswick, defeating them each time, and thus winning the championship of the State of New Jersey.

1863 In the spring of '63 the nine played two Philadelphia clubs, losing to the Athletics and winning from the Olympics. The personnel of the team was little changed by graduation, and in the fall of '63 they atoned for their failure of the spring by defeating the Athletics by a score of 29—13. Then a trip was made to Brooklyn from the 19th to the 22d of October. The expenses of these early trips were paid by the individual players themselves. Organized support of the teams did not begin until the early 'seventies, and perhaps was stronger then, or in '77, than at any other even later time. On this trip four games were played on four consecutive days, and the first three resulted in victories for the Nassaus over the Reso-lutes, Excelsiors, and Stars of Brooklyn. The fourth and last game was a defeat by the Atlantics, the champion team of the United States. However, it was a close contest, and the score would probably have been reversed if the students had exercised better judgment and played the Atlantics at the beginning of the trip, before the hard contests of three days had exhausted their strength. But this defeat did not spoil the trip, for they returned to college with the reputation of being one of the best teams in the United States, whether of college, amateur, or semi-professional clubs.

1864 The classes of '66 and '67 had brought a large number of good players to college, and the popularity of the sport rapidly increased. In the spring of '64 we find that eighty-eight men were playing regularly on regularly organized clubs. After Commencement was over the Nassaus went to Philadelphia to play the Athletics, by whom they were defeated. Then they went to New York and defeated the Mutuels on July 4, and the Stars on July 5. But again they had made the mistake of scheduling the hardest game as the last of the series; and on July 6 they were badly defeated by the Atlantics. The next day they went to Newark and, after a defeat by the Eurekas, disbanded for the vacation.

In the fall of '64 the team was organized into that strong nine known as the "Champions of '66," and the personnel of the nine was changed scarcely at all for the next two years. Their first game of the fall was with Williams College on Nov. 22, 1864. As far as we can learn this was the first inter-collegiate baseball game ever played. Yale's first match came in '65, and the first Harvard-Yale game was not played until '68. The Williams team was equipped with handsome uniforms, and their chagrin was great when they were badly defeated by "country jakes, who merely pulled off their coats and played in shirt-sleeves." A dinner at the Mansion House followed the game.

1865 In the year '65 the Nassau Base-ball Club played very few games, for it was overshadowed by a more prosperous and effective nine known as "The Princeton Baseball Club." This was composed of resident graduates, seminary students, and the most prominent undergraduates. They leased the ground located at the foot of Chambers Street and facing on Bayard Lane, where they made an excellent diamond. It was here that the Nassaus played their match games from '69 until the present quarters were secured.

The usual trip was taken this year after Commencement, and the first game was a defeat by Williams College on June 30. Fortune favored the club in its next three games with the Mutuels, the Athletics, and the Eurekas, but deserted it when it met its former conquerors, the Atlantics, of Brooklyn.

It has been impossible to discover the old score-book that contained the scores from '63 to '77 and which was in the hands of the baseball managers down to the class of '89. Here, however, all trace of it is lost. The Lit. makes mere mention of the games, while the Bric-a-Brac's accounts did not begin until '75 and the Princetonian in '77. Though the Nassau Herald's accounts, whose table of contents varies greatly, began in '64, yet it contained no scores. The sporting columns of the city papers had not yet come into existence, and from the special sporting papers, such as the New York Clipper and Philadelphia Sunday Mercury, these college games were squeezed out by the more popular semi-professional games. But we must not think that the interest in baseball at Princeton was lagging—far from it. In this year of '66 nines of every description were formed, contests between the representatives of Whig and Clio Halls were held, and the Nassaus played Rutgers for the first time, defeating them on May 5 by a score of 40—2. Three other victories were recorded over the Edge-Hills, the Burlingtons, and the Princetons.

1866 It was during the spring of '66 that the Nassau Cricketers came into prominence. There had been some cricket played all along since '57, especially in the spring of '63, when S. B. Huey, '63, captained the team. That fall the Katzenbach brothers entered the Freshman class, and were such enthusiastic players that the organization was maintained, but no matches were played until May 5, 1866, when the eleven of the University of Pennsylvania came to Princeton and was defeated, 40—34. Later two games were played with the Delaware Club, of Lambertville, in both of which Princeton suffered defeat. We hear no more of cricket until the association was reorganized by some Philadelphians in the fall of '74.

1867 During the season of '67 the interest in baseball seemed to increase. The first game of the season was between the Sophomore class teams of Princeton and Yale. On May 4, 1867, representatives of these "old rivals" met for the first time, and Princeton won, 58—52. Princeton won the return game also on June 27 by a score of 19—18. In May the Nassaus played three games, being beaten once by the Princetons.

The fall opened with a victory over these same Princetons, but closed with a defeat by the Columbias, of Bordentown. A very interesting series of class games had been played, which seemed to arouse greater interest than the Nassau games.

1868 The season of '68 marks the beginning of a new era in baseball at Princeton. Before this time the team had received absolutely no financial support from those students who did not play. But now the college was so enthusiastic over its team, which had just defeated Columbia College, 59—12, that a subscription was taken among all the students, and the team was sent on a trip after Commencement—not to Brooklyn, but to Harvard, Williams, and Yale. The Nassaus had met and defeated the teams of Williams, Rutgers, and Columbia in previous years, but in this spring began the long series of Princeton-Yale games and the more interrupted Princeton-Harvard series. The supporters of a dual league of the two New England colleges are always reminding us that Harvard and Yale are such old time-honored rivals in athletics. This is undoubtedly true in boating, for the Yale-Harvard races began in 1852. But if we turn to baseball and football we find that on this trip of '68 Princeton had played both Yale and Harvard before they ever crossed bats with each other, and that Princeton had defeated Yale in football in 1873, two years before the representatives of Yale and of Harvard met on the "gridiron."

The club left college immediately after Commencement, going directly to Cambridge, where it was defeated by Harvard on June 23, 17—16. The next day it played Williams College, and defeated its team, 24—14. On June 25, after four days of hard travel and two days of hard playing, the Nassaus were defeated by Yale, 30—23. At this time ball-playing, and especially these summer tours, were of more social importance than the younger graduates realize. In the fall, when the students came back and this tour was discussed, no one talked of the defeats, but the whole college criticised the way the team had been treated at Yale. At Harvard it had been hospitably received and at Williams trebly so. But the Yale men were absorbed in the elections to their secret societies, and left their visitors to shift for themselves. But this lack of courtesy has been forgotten in the long series of amicable relations that have made Princeton and Yale the standards of the inter-collegiate world.

In the fall of '68 baseball became even more popular. The classes fought zealously for the class championship, and "everyone in Princeton either played or talked baseball." The Princeton club had been reorganized so that every member was either an alumnus, tutor, or an undergraduate of Princeton. On Oct. 31 the Athletics of Philadelphia came to Princeton and were defeated. But the students forgot the glory of the victory in their joy and astonishment that the newly inaugurated President, Dr. James McCosh, had been an interested spectator. His presence informed the boys that baseball was officially sanctioned and raised from a mere pastime to a definite and dignified place in college life.

The good old Doctor was always ready to listen to the requests of the students and to anticipate their needs. In his inaugural address he had pointed out that the college needed a gymnasium. At the close of the exercises Mr. Robert Bonner, and Mr. Henry Marquand informed him that each would give $10,000 toward a gymnasium, and work was at once begun on the present gym. Twelve thousand dollars more was added before the building was completed in June, 1870.

It was at the inauguration of Dr. McCosh that college colors were first worn by the students. In this connection George K. Ward, '69, writes:

"In the early part of the year 1866 it occurred to me that as many of the sister colleges had a distinguishing color Princeton ought not to be behind the rest in such an excellent custom, and at a '69 class meeting, held on the 5th day of April, 1866, I brought the subject to the notice of the class. The matter was discussed quite freely, and as I had introduced the idea the question was put to me what my thought was as to the color. It so chanced that just about this time I had been interested in the history of William of Orange, the Prince of Nassau. Under a 'nom de plume' 'Ignobilis Pila' ('baseball') I afterward contributed an article to the Nassau Lit. entitled 'The Two Heroes,' one of the characters being William of Orange. The fact that William of Orange was also Prince of the House of Nassau suggested to my mind the propriety of orange as a color for Princeton, and having explained this connection to the class I proposed orange as the color and suggested that Mr. F. Thomas Finley, one of the brightest men of the class, should be appointed a committee of one to talk with the members of the other classes in regard to this choice. The chairman thought a committee of three would be preferable and forthwith made Mr. Finley chairman and associated with him Messrs. Keasbey and Aitken.

"The committee made no headway and later in the year reported that the scheme had failed to meet with approval. I do not know that any subsequent official action was taken by our class upon this question until our Senior year. But I do know this, that '69 approved the idea of orange for a class color; for in 1868, when we went to Yale to play our '69 class game, we carried along badges of orange ribbon with '69 B. C.' printed upon them.

"In our Senior year it was felt to be quite essential that we have a distinctive color, and at a meeting of the class at which I was not present Mr. Finley brought the matter up, and it was decided the color should be orange, with 'Princeton' in black letters printed thereon. We felt this selection of a color to be important, as the inauguration of Dr. James McCosh as President of the College was at hand. Evidently there was no true orange ribbon to be had in town, so we used the nearest thing to it that could be found—a dark lemon color.

"From this it is sufficiently evident that the 'orange and black' originated with the class of '69,—the color of the ribbon, orange; the word 'Princeton' printed thereon in black ink. The class of '69 is entitled to the honor of the selection, although, of course, so far as black is concerned, there was no significance attached to that in our minds. It was merely that the word 'Princeton' was appropriate, and black was the natural color to use in printing it."

Their idea, however, was not carried out by their successors, for when the baseball team went on their northern trip in the summer of '70 their stockings were blue, not orange and black; and though their suits are minutely described nothing is said of their 'colors.' During the early seventies this matter of colors seemed to have dropped completely out of College gossip. It was reawakened in '74, when an attempt was made by Rutgers to adopt orange and black. At the Saratoga regatta in '74 these colors became the recognized colors of Princeton, as they have remained ever since.

1869 The Nassau Baseball Club was by no means successful during the season of '69. The Princeton club was in a good financial condition, with excellent grounds and ample accommodations for the visiting teams. Consequently it was the popular team among the students and we cannot find the record even of any contests of the Nassaus.

In the fall of '69 Princeton played her first football game with an outside team. Two games were played with Rutgers, the first resulting in a defeat, the second in a victory. Of course the play was not the Rugby game, nor quite the "Association," but there was plenty of rough "Rutgers" playing. The ball was kicked, not carried. The contests, however, made very little impression on the College at large, for there are almost no records.

1870 The important event of the season of '70 was the opening of the gymnasium on May 30 and the first gymnastic exhibition. There was also a livelier interest in the baseball team. The Princeton club had disbanded, probably because they realized how much their club was injuring pure college athletics. Consequently all attention was focussed on the 'Varsity team, and a fund was subscribed among the students to send the nine on another tour of the colleges like that of '68, even though Yale and Harvard had made no return trips to Princeton. For this tour the team was equipped with suits of white shirts, knickerbockers, and blue stockings. A large number of students accompanied the team and saw Brown and Yale defeated; but Harvard won its game.

1871 In the fall of '70 four unimportant games of baseball were played and Rutgers sent twenty-five men to Princeton to play football. In the spring of '71 we find records of the first definite organization of the baseball team. The control was vested in a board of directors, including, first of all, the captain, the secretary, the treasurer, and the scorer, for in those days the scorer held a very important position, although his careless successors have lost his carefully recorded accounts. Five hundred dollars were subscribed by the students to send the team on a northern tour after commencement, but so many of the regular players were compelled to be absent that the project was abandoned, lest the excellent reputation of the previous year should be overthrown. If we judge from the columns of the Lit., the most important thing of the whole season was the change of uniform to "brown tights and light shirts." There were no football contests of any sort, except, of course, the daily "kicking for fun over the Cannon."

1872 The spring of '72 seems to mark a decline in the interest in all sports. There is only one game of baseball recorded, and there was no enthusiasm shown even in the recently established gym. contests. To be sure, a crew had been organized and won second place in the National Amateur Regatta at Philadelphia. As a result, in the fall, all the athletes joined the Boating Association. But their devotion was very short lived, for in the success of the baseball nine in the spring the crew was forgotten, no races were arranged and the Association was left to shift for itself. Rutgers was defeated in the one football game of the season by four goals to one.

1873 In the spring of '73 all was changed. New vigor seemed to enter every organization. Before the calendar year had ended three important events had occurred. Yale had played—and won—her first baseball game on Princeton grounds, the Caledonian Track games had been established, and Yale had been defeated in the first Princeton-Yale football match. The baseball game came on May 10. Twice before, in '68 and '70, Princeton had gone to New Haven, but Yale had always been unable to play return games. Until the seventh inning of this contest the score had stood 2—1; then Princeton became "rattled" and Yale made 7 runs. Two weeks later Princeton met Yale again, this time at New Haven, and defeated them 10—9. From there the team went to Cambridge, where they played with Harvard the most remarkable amateur game of that period. Princeton scored two runs in the second inning and Harvard one in the third. No other tally was made until the eighth inning, when Princeton scored the last run of the game. This established the reputation of the Princeton team, and they returned to receive challenges from the best professional clubs in the country. One of these was accepted, and on May 24 the Resolutes of Elizabeth were surprised with a defeat in a game in which the professional was strongly contrasted with the purely amateur style of play. After defeating the team from Lafayette in a poorly played game, the spring season closed with a most disastrous defeat for Princeton by the Atlantics; the team may have become over-confident, like some later Princeton teams. After the victory over Harvard, Princeton claimed the championship because Harvard had defeated Yale. But Yale protested that Princeton had not won two games out of three. All efforts to arrange a deciding contest proved futile. In the fall Yale declined to play a third championship game, alleging that their nine was disorganized, but a "practice" game was played on Oct. 10 at Princeton, which resulted in a victory for Princeton of 18—4. Before winter set in, Princeton had won three and lost two games to professionals.

Meantime track athletics had been organized. When the new gymnasium had been opened in '70, it was deemed advisable to employ a competent instructor, and Mr. George Goldie was chosen for this position. No wiser choice could have been made, for, though a professional, Mr. Goldie possessed the true spirit of a sportsman which we usually require only in an amateur. He was not satisfied with more than fulfilling his duty in the gymnasium, but began to interest himself in all the sports of the students. Then he began to suggest and show, until finally in the spring of '73 it was decided to hold an annual meeting for track athletics. This was called the Caledonian games because at the time Mr. Goldie held the Caledonian championship for all-around athletics. The modest records of this first meet, on June 21, indicate the lack of training of the contestants, but the next year showed a marked improvement. In fact, in '74 we find the remarkable time of  $9\frac{1}{2}$  and  $9\frac{3}{4}$  seconds for the 100-yards dash. These games have been held every year since, in an unbroken series, and except in the one instance of '77, when Columbia was invited to compete, they have been confined to class representatives. Their importance for developing 'Varsity candidates and maintaining class spirit cannot be overrated. Track athletics, we regret to say, will not receive its just share of our attention and space, because it is necessary to exclude accounts of individuals, of which solely the track history would consist.

The third important athletic event of '73 was the first Princeton-Yale football game. In this Princeton took the initiative and invited delegates to a convention in New York to determine the rules of the play. Harvard declined, but Princeton, Yale, and Rutgers attended. Under these first intercollegiate rules Princeton defeated Yale, three goals to one. The Yale team was much heavier, and resorted to a crude sort of interference or "bucking," while Princeton depended on running, kicking, and hand batting. At first it looked as if Yale would win, but they committed the error which has lost so many games of later years—they did not follow the ball closely. The proposed game with Rutgers was postponed indefinitely because they could not play at Princeton except during recitation hours, and naturally the Faculty refused to allow Princeton to play.

1874 Athletic activity seemed to increase in the following spring of '74, though it is rather difficult to obtain definite statements, because the Lit. (the only record-keeper of the time) seems to have been less impressed by the playing of the baseball team than by their new grayish-blue suits, with orange braid, which had been purchased by a general subscription among the students. A very important change, however, was made in the rules which permitted the "overhand" throw and prepared the way for curve-pitching. The team itself seemed too much interested in their new suits, or more, probably, lacked discipline. At any rate, out of the nine games played with various clubs before Commencement they were able to win only five. The management had tried very hard to induce Yale and Harvard to play at Princeton, but all to no purpose. It was decided finally to send the nine on an eastern tour after Commencement. And a most disastrous tour it was. The chief fault was that some of the regular players could not go. But even with substitutes 16—1 was a shameful score for any Yale game. The following day, June 30, a close victory of 13—11 was won over Harvard, but two days later the tables were turned, 19—4 in Harvard's favor. The truth is there was no pitcher. Mann had not yet settled down to the work which has made him the most famous Princeton pitcher; at least five members of the team were in the graduating class and more or less unnerved by the festivities and sorrows of Commencement; while the whole team was worn out with hard traveling and frequent playing. From Boston they went to Hartford to meet a defeat by the professionals, then on to Brooklyn, where Yale defeated them again, 3—11. The last game of the season, and the deciding game with Harvard, was won by Princeton, 11—8, but even this would not blur out the two defeats by Yale.

Meantime Princeton had won her first and only victory in a boating race. Early in the spring so much interest in boating was shown by the college that delegates were sent to the intercollegiate rowing convention, and Princeton was admitted into the Association. A 'Varsity and a Freshman crew were entered in the Saratoga Regatta of July. The Freshman race against Yale and Brown was won fairly by the crew of the class of '77. The whole College—alumni and undergraduates—exulted in this victory, for this was Princeton's first appearance in an intercollegiate regatta. Their ardor was dampened but not squelched by the defeat of the 'Varsity crew in the 'Varsity race, in which Princeton brought up the rear. Many rumors try to explain this defeat, but when we consider the entire history of boating at Princeton we ought not to require excuses. Princeton never was and perhaps never can be a boating college. By far the easiest way is to regard the victory of the Freshman crew as the exceptional event and try to explain it. The traditions of boating at Princeton have almost disappeared, but this race should always be remembered as the first time that the combination of orange and black was worn as distinctively the colors of Princeton.

In connection with these races the New York Herald had established the first "Olympian" games or semi-official track meet. Princeton was represented by three men and secured two second prizes. In the fall nine Princeton students entered the National Gymnastic and Athletic Tournament in New York, and secured fifteen first and second prizes, among others the medal for the best general gymnast.

In the fall of '74 there was little activity of any kind. Two of the four baseball games were defeats; and the two football games that gave Princeton the championship were easy victories over Columbia and Rutgers of six goals to none. Another set of students not generally classed among the athletes of the college had reorganized the old cricket-club, and for the next four years it lived along, playing a few games, never very active, but affording its members a great deal of quiet fun. Cricket never flourished at Princeton, because it required too long a time for practice. It was revived again for two years in '81, and even as late as '99 a few enthusiasts might have been seen batting and bowling on the old tennis-courts below Brokaw. But the class of men who used to enjoy a game of cricket are now interested in golf, and it is very doubtful if an attempt to revive cricket at Princeton will ever be made, despite the large number of students from cricket-loving Philadelphia.

1875 During the fall the baseball nine practised faithfully, endeavoring to atone for the unsuccessful tour of the summer. All winter long the members worked in the gym., even though rowing seemed the more popular sport. And had the team abandoned their summer trip, their training would have been rewarded by the most remarkable record of any year. Their successes were due to the pitching by "Mac" Mann, and their failure to his lack of support. The first important game was a defeat by Harvard, 7—9. On May 21 Mann's pitching attracted the most attention. The Centennials won by the then wonderful score of 2—1. It was a battle of a pitcher against a team, and Mann lost. Of course now it is very easy to account for his work; he was pitching curved balls. But then even the possibility of curving a ball was disputed. There is a great controversy as to the inventor of the curve-pitching. Probably the question of first honor will never be settled indisputably, but two facts are undoubted:

Mann pitched curves in these games which were strange to all opponents, even to the professionals, and every later Princeton pitcher has pitched curved balls.

The remarkable score of the Centennial game had attracted the attention of the entire sporting world, and a large crowd gathered at Princeton on May 24 to witness the Princeton-Atlantics game. And a good game it was, with few errors and wonderful pitching. Consequently the score was small, in favor of Princeton, 3—2. This victory placed Princeton at the head of the baseball teams of the United States, and perhaps the team realized this too well, for two days later, when Yale came, Princeton allowed Yale five runs from errors in the first inning and never quite recovered their nerve until the game was lost, 14 to 4. Two days later Harvard won in a game where Princeton became "rattled" before the cool veterans who opposed them. But all defeats were forgotten in the joy of the next game. It was against the unusually strong team of Yale at New Haven on May 24, and the final score was 3—0, in Princeton's favor. Both teams played well, but of course the game was won by Mann's pitching, for Yale did not get a single base hit. Several other games were played before the season closed with its remarkable record of small scores. At that time small scores were almost unheard of, even among the professional teams.

Inspired by the record of '74, the Boating Association entered two crews in the Intercollegiate Regatta of '75. Though the Freshman crew finished fourth in a close race with Cornell, Harvard, and Brown, yet no Princeton six-oared crew has ever excelled their time of 17 min. 42½ seconds for a three-mile race. In the 'Varsity race Princeton did not even cross the finish-line, for one of the crew, Parmly, fainted just as the boat passed the two-mile buoy. This, however, was regarded as an accident, and the Association was not discouraged. Their only fault, so the critics said, was lack of training. In the fall the first annual bumping races were held on the canal, but for some reason they failed to be as interesting as anticipated.

In the fall of '75 only two games of football were played, in which Columbia and Stevens were defeated. Harvard was playing the Rugby game and Yale was trying to follow, so they both declined to accept any challenges for the old "Association" game. But the time had not come for the introduction of Rugby into Princeton. The only public expression of opinion upon this new game is found in the Lit., which speaks of the less fair, more rowdyish, and ungentlemanly game of Harvard and Yale.

1876 The baseball team played five games in the fall, the fifth with Amherst, resulting in a close game of 5—6 in Amherst's favor. All winter the team practised faithfully, but the season of 1876 was disastrous. The entire nine had learned to rely upon the wonderful pitching of "Mac" Mann, and when he strained his arm, and was compelled to stop playing, the team went to pieces. A well-disciplined team of mediocre players can often defeat an ill-managed team of "stars." But the Princeton team lacked both pitcher and discipline. Yale defeated Princeton on May 20 by 9—12, and again, on June 6, 3—13. In fact, Princeton lost all the games of the eastern tour, Amherst winning, 12—18, and Harvard 4—8. After this the team played better, defeating several professional teams, but when Harvard came to Princeton on June 28 rain spoiled Princeton's only chance of redeeming her record. This lack of success led to an investigation of the management, which was changed from a self-perpetuating board of directors to one whose members were annually responsible directly to their classes.

It was in this season of 1876 that the colleges which had been sending representatives to the "New York Herald" games at Saratoga decided to form an Intercollegiate Athletic Association that would control the annual meets. On July 20, 1876, the first meet was held, and although lack of funds permitted Princeton to send only three men, yet these three won four first and four second prizes, and with them the championship of the meet.

The crew had been practising all spring, but succeeded only in maintaining the Princeton reputation of finishing last. This was the last Intercollegiate race for Princeton until the Childs Challenge Cup contests with Pennsylvania, Columbia, and Cornell in 1879. The Intercollegiate Association was disabled when Harvard and Yale withdrew because of the large number of contestants, which prevented a fair course and tempted the use of professional methods.

In the fall the Boating Association dragged out an embarrassed existence. No one cared to contribute to a dying organization, and the debt kept growing greater. Still there was hope—among a few enthusiasts at least, and a crew was entered in the Burlington regatta. But a drunken partizan fouled the boat, and the race was declared off. The second annual bumping races were won by 1878, and for the last time representatives were sent to the Intercollegiate Convention. There the rule of eligibility was broadened to include members of all departments of the universities, and this action, taking away all possibility of victory, forced Princeton out of the Association, for Princeton, with its undergraduate departments only, has always been handicapped in its contests with other universities that embrace professional schools.

The fall of 1876 marks also the beginning of the modern Intercollegiate Football Association. Harvard had adopted the English game, Yale was trying both, and Princeton clung to the Association game, in which she had been champion for so many years. At Princeton's invitation representatives from Yale, Harvard, Columbia, and Princeton met and drew up a set of rules modelled on the English Rugby game. Yale and Harvard had had some little experience with the new style, but Princeton knew nothing of it, nor was there any time for practice, as the schedule was filled with Association games which Princeton, as champion, could not cancel. All of these games were victories, but Yale won the game under the new rules, scoring two goals. The Princeton players were so ignorant of the rules that they claimed both goals had been made on fouls. But in the third half hour they ceased to look for fouls and followed the style of their opponents' play, and, although they did not score, they prevented Yale from making other goals. Through the courtesy of Harvard the Princeton-Harvard contest was postponed until the spring, when Princeton hoped to know more about the Rugby game. But it was very difficult to find any one to play against, for the old game was still the more popular in the college at large. It was not surprising, therefore, that Harvard won. But these two defeats had given Princeton valuable experience which was to show itself in the fall.

1877 The baseball season of 1877 began well but ended disastrously. Several strong players had been lost by graduation and the nine was completely reorganized. Though a few games had been played in the fall, it was decided not to organize the 'Varsity, but to leave the field and the interest open to the class contests, which were and are such good trainers for the 'Varsity. In the spring both Harvard and Yale came to Princeton, and, after close matches, won. Harvard fielded so well that no Princeton man could reach first base until the fourth inning nor score until the fifth. In the last four innings of the game Princeton made five runs and Harvard two, but it was too late, and Harvard won, 7—5. Four days later Yale came to Princeton and won, 6—4, although Princeton batted the wonderful pitcher, Carter, as no nine had ever done, and in the last four innings made three runs to Yale's one. These games had been so close that the nine decided to go on an Eastern tour. But it rained all the time. After cancelling four games because of the rain, an attempt was made to play Harvard on a wet field, and Harvard won, 16—1. The nine traveled all night to New Haven, where the Yale game was played in the rain, and for the first time in her intercollegiate history Princeton failed to score a run. But all these defeats were perfectly excusable when we consider the week of hard traveling and rain.

Princeton was again successful in the intercollegiate games, winning third place. All three prizes were won in the shot-put and hammer-throw, also first place in the 120-yard hurdle and in the graduates' 100-yard dash and mile walk, and two other second prizes in the broad jump and pole vault.

All the students were looking eagerly forward to the football matches of 1877, when a Princeton team, experienced in the Rugby rules, would meet Harvard and Yale on more equal terms. The Harvard game was won by Princeton Nov. 3. Harvard had the advantage at first and secured a touchdown. Then Princeton forgot to be nervous, and played. The game was the finest college contest of the time, and in no other game had there ever been such hard playing. Princeton's first touchdown was won by Dodge and Cutts, but the second was gained by Ballard, who escaped from a scrimmage and ran the length of the field for a touchdown. The next game was an easy victory over Columbia, and then the team disbanded, as there seemed to be little chance of arranging a game with Yale, which insisted on playing with eleven men. However, two days before Thanksgiving Yale accepted the conditions, and the Princeton team was reorganized. Before the game, at the request of Yale's captain, an agreement was made that nothing but goals should count. Consequently the result was a draw, though Yale scored two touchdowns. The game was filled with rough and foul plays; in fact both of Yale's touchdowns were scored on what Princeton claimed were fouls, and the whole game was strongly contrasted with the fierce but clean Harvard contest.

1878 In the season of 1878 the nine played very erratically. In the early games they seemed "rattled," but on April 30 they played a very close game with the strong team of Philadelphia, the Athletics. The first college game with Harvard was utterly devoid of interest, as Princeton was unable to hit Ernst at all, and fielded carelessly. But the very next day an exciting game was played, resulting in Harvard's victory of 3—1. The play was interrupted in the seventh inning by rain, and when Harvard returned to the bat, the ball and the field were wet and slippery. This may excuse the fielding errors, which allowed Harvard to score three runs. On May 15 Princeton won her first college game on home grounds for the last five years, defeating Yale 5—4. After this the team was disbanded, because the dates for the return games could not be arranged satisfactorily. However, late in May the trip was arranged. Harvard won both games. In the Yale game Princeton allowed Yale to score eight runs and then began to play, but it was too late, and it was necessary to play a third deciding game in Hoboken. Princeton played listlessly, and Yale won by the score of 10—3.

The Intercollegiate track meet of 1878 was held at Mott Haven on the 18th of May, and if the graduate events are counted Princeton tied Columbia for first place, winning seven first prizes and two second prizes. However, it was the work of one star, F. Larkin, '79, who won four of the five undergraduate first prizes.

In the fall of 1878 the directors of the Football Association were wise enough to arrange four practice games with Rutgers, Stevens, and the University of Pennsylvania before the more important contests with Yale and Harvard. The Harvard game was played at Boston and resulted in a victory of a small score. In the first half Loney fell on the ball behind Harvard's line after a fumble, and in the second half McNair ran the length of the field, but was downed three yards from the goal. Then he barely missed a drop-kick. The Thanksgiving Day game was marred by rain and mud, but Princeton won. In the first half Princeton was on the defensive, but became aggressive in the second, when Withington, aided by Brotherlin's interference, made a touchdown, from which McNair kicked a goal.

1879 In the spring of 1879 the baseball team was burdened by a large debt, and there was some talk of not putting a nine on the field. This threat caused a popular subscription, which cancelled the obligation. A great deal of time was spent in trying the men, and little improvement was made until after the Yale game of May 3. In that game Yale won by the errors of the in-field, who muffed even "pop" flies and threw wildly. Late in May Harvard came to Princeton and was defeated in the first game, when the Harvard nine seemed demoralized because their veteran captain, Ernst, was absent. In the next game both the post-graduates, Tyng and Ernst, played despite the protest of Princeton. Princeton declared that this team did not represent Harvard University, but was a professional team. The discussion upon the rules of eligibility led to the formation, in the fall, of the Intercollegiate Association with a definite constitution. On the last day of May Yale won an exciting game with the score 3—0. Yale made her runs chiefly through Princeton's errors, and Princeton failed to score because they could not hit outside of the perfect fielding of the in-field. The last two matches of the trip were both draw games. In the sixth inning of the Harvard game the field became so slippery that it was agreed to call the game, the score being 3—3. At the end of the ninth inning of the Brown game the score stood 10—10, but Princeton was compelled to take the evening boat and could not play off the tie.

Through the exertions of F. Larkin, '79, who won first place in throwing the hammer, standing broad jump, standing high jump, and putting the shot, Princeton won second place in the Intercollegiate games in May. Three second prizes were won, but all by Seniors.

After the baseball season all attention was turned to the crew, for boating had been revived. The last contest had been the third annual fall regatta in October, 1877, on the Delaware River at Burlington. After that the association languished under a debt of $500, which no one was willing to remove. Here, probably, the history of boating at Princeton would have ended had it not been for the kindness of the University of Pennsylvania, which invited Princeton to row in July, 1879, with Columbia for the Childs Challenge Cup, and all the expenses of the visiting teams were paid. This was such a surprise that the offer was at once accepted, and Princeton entered on another six years of defeats, terminating in 1885. As usual one of the crew was ill, and Princeton finished last.

There were the usual uninteresting practice games of football in the fall, leading up to the Harvard game of November 15, 1879. The first half was remarkable for Princeton's long kicks, and the second for skillful passing and tackling, while even the Harvard papers commented on the Princeton discipline. The only score was a drop-kick from the field by McNair, after he had tried five place kicks which forced Harvard to make the same number of "safeties." The game was very close, for Winsor tried a drop-kick for the Princeton goal, which, in a strong wind, went only six inches outside the posts. The Yale game was a disappointment, resulting in a drawn game in which neither side cared to take the offensive. Yale played in a manner which both the Harvard and Princeton papers of the time characterize as "ungentlemanly." In the second half a drop-kick by McNair passed over the Yale post, but the referee refused to call it a goal. However, Princeton was still champion.

1880 In the winter of 1879-1880 the Intercollegiate Baseball Association was formed between Amherst, Brown, Dartmouth, Harvard, and Princeton. Yale did not enter the Association until the following year. A rule was adopted limiting eligibility to students who had been in a department of the University for an entire year, and excluding men who had played in professional games. Late in May Harvard came to Princeton and was defeated twice. On June 1 Princeton began her northern trip by defeating Dartmouth in a very exciting game of 2-1. Two days later Brown won from Princeton, who was greatly handicapped by the roughness and character of the field. In the game of June 4 Harvard gained a lead of one run in the ninth inning. Then Princeton came to the bat and McCune tied the score by a two-base hit and passed ball. Winsor dropped Duffield's third strike and threw wildly to first, allowing Horton to score the winning run. It was necessary to make many changes in the team for the Yale game, and the resulting confusion led to ten errors which gave Yale a victory of 8-1. Then, after two weeks of traveling, with seven games of ball, the team entered the Amherst game. Amherst won, chiefly because of her left-handed pitcher. This necessitated a third game with Amherst, but on June 22 Amherst failed to appear, and the championship was awarded to Princeton.

This year the interest in track athletics at college increased, though only two prizes were won in the intercollegiate games—first prizes in pole vaulting and the bicycle race—and Princeton had to share third place of the meet with Stevens.

The Boating Association continued to dwindle away. The bumping races were postponed from the fall of 1879 to the spring, but even then were not held. As for the 'Varsity, though they assessed each student a dollar to meet expenses and hire of a professional coach, yet they came in last again.

In the fall of 1880 the Intercollegiate Football Association reduced the number of players from fifteen to eleven, in order to increase open playing and to prevent drawn games. A large number of practice games had been arranged, but only three were played, and one of these, with the University of Pennsylvania, was very close. Of the two championship games, that with Harvard proved again to be the more interesting. Harvard tackled so fiercely that many Princeton players had to retire, but nevertheless two touchdowns were scored, one on a fumble, when Loney fell on the ball, and the second honestly earned by Winton, while Harvard's one was made on a foul. Princeton showed admirable reserve strength, pressing Harvard closest at the end of the game. The Yale game was a draw again, probably because of the slippery field, which prevented Yale's heavyweights from starting and made the Princeton runners fall. The game was interesting to watch, as it was free from all "dirty" playing, but every one was disappointed in the score.

1881 The first important baseball game of the season of 1881 was against Yale on May 7. Princeton was defeated through unfortunate bunching of errors in the fourth inning, which gave Yale a lead of one run that lasted throughout the game. On May 16 a remarkable game was played against Washington. In the ninth inning Princeton made four runs and tied the score. It took Washington four more innings to make the winning run. Harvard won the game of May 21 by her excellent fielding, combined with Princeton's poor batting. The tendency was to knock high, easy flies to the outfield, and no batter seemed able to place the ball. At the end of the third inning of the Yale game of June 1 the score was 5—1 in Yale's favor. Then Princeton began a plucky uphill fight that resulted in a victory of 7—6. The final championship game with Harvard was won in the tenth inning, when Archer came in on a wild throw that hit the catcher's foot and rolled a few feet away. The season closed with a victory over Dartmouth of 4—3. Yale had won the largest number of games and was declared champion, with Princeton and Harvard close seconds.

Princeton dropped another place in the Inter-collegiate games this year, winning fourth place, with one first prize, the tug of war, and the second prizes in the pole vault and quarter-mile run. Yet even this was enough to excel Yale and the University of Pennsylvania.

The spring of 1881 is perhaps the most interesting year of the second era of boating at Princeton, for the 'Varsity crew rowed in the Passaic regatta on May 30, but was fouled, and technically won the Childs Challenge Cup, the only 'Varsity race Princeton ever won. There was no doubt that Princeton had an exceptionally good crew, and no one realized this better than Ellis Ward, who was coaching Pennsylvania. He insisted on retaining on the crew a man named Hart, whom Princeton and Columbia had protested. The case delayed the race, but finally Hart was taken out of the boat by the managing committee of the University of Pennsylvania, and the postponed race was announced for the 5th of July. But when the boats drew up to the starting-line Hart was pulling his regular oar. Princeton rowed leisurely over the course, and in the evening the regatta committee awarded the cup to Princeton.

A new sport was winning great attention at Princeton—the old Indian game of lacrosse. Harvard had begun to play it the year before, and Princeton took it up in the spring of 1881. It was considered as a good training-school for the other sports. For instance, it taught track men endurance; it gave baseball men practice in quickness and base-running; and in the spring it showed the football men how to dodge and run. The Faculty would not allow the team to leave town, but one game was played in Baltimore during Easter vacation, and the teams from the New York and Columbia clubs came down, and after Commencement the team entered the tournament for the Oelrichs Cup at Hoboken. In the fall five games were played. The first, against New York University, was a draw; two against Columbia were won; and two were lost to Harvard and New York.

In the fall of 1881 many experiments were made in the style of football play, and this required a large number of practice games. Two games were played with Rutgers, two with the University of Pennsylvania, and one each with Stevens, Columbia, and the University of Michigan. In these every phase of play was tried, for reports said that Harvard had an unusually strong team, and such it proved on the 19th of November at New York. There was good playing on both sides, but neither scored, and for the first time the new rule was carried out providing for extra halves of fifteen minutes each in case of a draw. But again no score was made, and darkness closed the game. But if this was unsatisfactory, the Yale game was far more so. It is called the famous "block" game, because each team tried, not to score themselves, but only to keep its opponents from scoring. In the first half Princeton had the ball except for four minutes, and in the second half Princeton never had the ball once. There were only four kicks during the entire game, and the ball scarcely moved from one position. At this time there was no five yard rule; a team kept the ball until it fumbled or scored. All afternoon they passed and ran and blocked before a disgusted audience, and finally they were compelled to stop because of darkness. The rest of the year was spent in inventing rules to prevent the repetition of such a game.

1882 It was found necessary in the season of 1882 to amend the eligibility rule so as to exclude all students whose college expenses were paid. The championship series opened with a defeat by Amherst. Then followed a close victory over Dartmouth. Strong batting, good base-running, and errors by Harvard gave Princeton the game of May 19. Yale won the game of May 30 by the superior work of her battery and good batting, Camp, for instance, knocked two home-runs. On June 3 Princeton won the second Harvard game, and on June 24 Princeton met Yale for a second time in New York, but this time for victory, because Yale could not hit Moffat's curves. Three days later the deciding game was won by Yale, who, profiting by the experience of the former game, found out Moffat's weakness, and Yale was champion for another year, with Princeton second.

The gradual descent of Princeton from the first to the last place in the intercollegiate games continued this year, although, with the exception of the tug of war, Princeton had made as good a record as last year, winning second prize in the mile run and pole vault, which yielded fifth place, after Harvard, Columbia, Yale, and University of Pennsylvania.

The year 1882 was full of activity for the crew, which proved to be probably the best 'Varsity crew that represented Princeton. They won second place in the Newark regatta of May 30, and were a close second in the Childs Challenge Cup race on June 23. The crew had made such a good record that it was decided to send them to the Intercollegiate regatta at Lake George on July 4. They came in third, defeating Cornell and Bowdoin.

More interest was shown in lacrosse, for an Intercollegiate Association had been formed between Columbia, Harvard, New York University, and Princeton. In the spring Harvard won and Columbia lost. Early in the fall the first game was played with Yale, and resulted in a victory for Princeton, 2—0. Princeton won the return game, and the college at large began to take interest in the sport in which Yale was being defeated. The last game of the season was against the New York Club in the Oelrichs tournament, and was lost after a stubborn, well-contested game of unusual length.

The football season of 1882 opened with the new rule against a "block" game,—that the team having the ball must advance it five yards or retreat ten yards in three successive downs; otherwise the ball to be given to the opponents. The practice games, seven in number, were all close and exciting, but the first game of importance was against Harvard, on Nov. 18, at Cambridge. Early in the game Coolidge fumbled a kick and Haxall fell on the ball for a touchdown. The ball was punted out, and, after a fair catch, a place-kick resulted in a goal. The Princeton supporters thought this counted as a touchdown and a goal, so when the game closed and Harvard had made a touchdown and a goal from the field, the game was considered a tie. But the referee decided that Harvard had won,—it certainly had in spirit, if not in the letter of the law. The season closed with the Yale game on Thanksgiving Day. Yale had a stronger rush-line, but Princeton excelled in kicking. Haxall made a magnificent place-kick of sixty-five yards, and scored for Princeton. Yale had made a touchdown and a goal, and now played on the defensive merely. However, they scored another, though protested, touchdown. Then Princeton forced the ball down the field with great rapidity. Yale made a magnificent stand on the three-yard line, but the ball was pushed over. But the referee was not sure whose hands were on the ball when it crossed the line, and refused to give Princeton the touchdown! So the game resulted in the first victory for Yale since the fall of 1876, when the new game had been introduced. The style of Rugby play had changed greatly. Until the fall of 1881 it was an open kicking game; then came the "scrimmage" game. In the late 'eighties interference was developed, and later mass-plays. But in the last six years a more scientific game has been played, combining the best features of the previous styles.

1883 The baseball management had difficulty in arranging good practice games. The Faculty had prohibited more than five games out of town and all games with professionals. But the student body were so strongly opposed to this handicap that the Faculty yielded. The ninth game of the season was won from Harvard, on May 18, by the score 6—5. Princeton's lead was lost and retaken in the ninth inning. After two close games with Amherst, one victory and one defeat, Princeton played Brown on May 26. At the beginning of the ninth inning the score was 4—6 in favor of Brown, but two errors gave Princeton two runs. The game was won in the tenth by an error and three single hits. The first Yale game was played in New York, and lost with the score of 4—5, because of errors of judgment. Two days later was scheduled the second championship game with Harvard. The Princeton baggage, however, did not come, and through the courtesy of the Harvard management the championship game was postponed until June 2, and the exhibition game was played in borrowed suits. The second game was won by Princeton, 5—3. On June 23 Princeton won the Yale game by the score of 3—2. But unfortunately no third game could be arranged, and the championship was given to Yale, with Princeton second.

Happily there was a decided brace in Princeton's track-athletic career, and from the fifth in 1882 Princeton rose to the second place in the Intercollegiate games of 1883. Harriman won first prize in the 120-yard hurdle, and Toler broke the record in the pole vault. Second prizes were won in the running high jump, 440-yard dash, and pole vault, while Princeton men came in third in the mile run, running broad jump, and throwing the hammer. A new series of games had been established in the spring, known as the Annual Class Championship and Preliminary Intercollegiate games. In these the candidates were sifted out for the Mott Haven games, and the Peace Cup was awarded to the class making the largest score. However, these did not take the place of the Caledonian games.

The interest in boating increased still more in the spring of 1883. It was regarded as an excellent spring training for football men, and these helped to fill the boats. The 'Varsity rowed in four regattas, and a Junior crew was sent to the Harlem regatta. On May 30, after winning the first heat of the Newark regatta in record time, the 'Varsity was fouled in the final, but finished third. Two days later they won the mile race in the Harlem regatta, badly defeating Columbia, and the Junior crew also won first place in their race. The success of these races aroused the interest of the whole college in the Childs Cup race on June 15. Princeton excelled Pennsylvania in strength, but not in skill. Princeton rowed too fast at the start and was unable to spurt at the finish. This, with erratic steering and a foul, allowed Pennsylvania to win by four seconds. The same crew won third place in the Lake George regatta, and the following day Capt. Jennison won the single-scutt race.

In the spring the lacrosse team had improved remarkably. They defeated New York University, Columbia, and Yale, and tied Baltimore. But the strong Harvard team, which included several players of long experience, won by 3—0.

The football season of 1883 opened with many obstacles. There were only four old players, but one of these was Moffat, and this was the year of the famous "Moffat" kicks. He began to kick goals in the first game of the season against Rutgers, and reached the climax of his success in the second half of the Harvard game of November 17. During the first half a strong wind was dead against Princeton, and Lamar made the only Princeton score by speedy dodging. Harvard scored a touchdown from a fumble and a beautiful goal from the field. But the wind was in Princeton's favor in the second half, and Moffat managed to kick five goals, to the great astonishment of the Harvard men, and the game closed with the greatest defeat for Harvard that either of the three colleges had suffered since the formation of the Intercollegiate Association. On Thanksgiving Day it rained, and the muddy field increased the handicap for Princeton. Yale's team far outweighed the light but active Princetonians, who found it almost impossible, on the slippery field, to check the momentum of the heavy Yale rushers. It was Princeton's policy for Moffat to kick as often as possible, and, though it was tried time and time again, yet the Yale rushers always broke through the forwards and tackled Moffat as he received the ball. Princeton, therefore, had to be content with second place.

1884 The baseball season began with a debt which the failures of the team and lack of support made larger. An appeal was made to repair the grounds also, but that was not accomplished until another year. Everybody seemed disheartened, especially after the proposed Eastern tour. Just before the team started the clubs cancelled their dates, and, instead of seeking games with professionals or practice against a picked nine, the team disbanded. On May 10 Amherst made three base-hits and three runs in the second inning, and then in the tenth gained the winning run, making the score 5—4. Two days later Harvard won by the same score, but neither side made a run from the eighth to the thirteenth inning, when an overthrow gave Harvard the winning run. Harvard won the second game also on May 24, but Princeton played with a substitute battery. On May 30 Princeton received the worst defeat that Yale has ever given, the score standing 16—3. And the final Yale game on June 19 was lifeless, as Yale won in the first two innings, and after that both nines hurried to the end. Princeton ranked fifth in the Intercollegiate Association.

In the Intercollegiate track games Princeton did not retain her high rank of last year, but receded to fourth place, with first prize in pole vaulting and the second in the running broad jump. This, however, did not discourage the men, and in the fall another series of games was instituted, the Open Handicap games, which proved valuable in bringing the men out for early training and showing the captain the possibilities to be developed in the spring.

In the spring of 1884, despite the opposition from all quarters, the Boating Association decided to make a last effort, and were as unsuccessful as before. Two crews entered the Passaic regatta of May 30. In the Junior race Princeton came in third, but the Senior race was a farce. There were so many entries that a fair start could not be made, and Princeton finally withdrew. The crew was deprived of first prize on June 4, at the Harlem regatta, by some technical misunderstanding of the rules, though they finished first. In order to make the Childs Challenge Cup contests more exciting, Cornell was asked to take the place vacated by Columbia. Princeton rowed in such bad form that it was evident from the start they would finish last. The crew was changed slightly, and sent to Lake George regatta, where they followed the Princeton tradition of finishing third. But this was the last race. The enthusiasm of the few gave way before repeated defeats and the constant indifference of the college.

Lacrosse, in the spring of 1884, seemed to exist as a sport in itself, independent of football, for very few members of its team played football. The National Association decided to send a national team to England, and on it Princeton was represented by J. A. Hodge, Jr., '83, S. J. Poe, '84, and H. W. Hall, '83. Before the team sailed it defeated Princeton by the small score of 4—1. The next game was against Yale in the Oelrichs tournament, and for the first time resulted in a victory for Yale. But later in the season the championship game was played at New Haven, and Yale was defeated. Princeton won the college championship for the first time in the history of the sport, defeating Harvard, while an easy victory was won over New York University.

In the fall of 1884 many important steps were taken in the development of the science of football. The chief of these was the invention of the trick-interference, or formation known as the Princeton "V." However, it was slightly used until the next year. Yale led the way in interference, practically inventing and developing this style of play, while Princeton was thinking more about kicking. On October 29 Lafayette was defeated by the record score of 140—0. Princeton defeated Harvard, 34—0, playing a running game, in which Lamar made the sensational run of the length of the field, only to lose the ball by a foul on the goal-line. The Yale game was unsatisfactory in every respect. The referee seemed to be decidedly partial in all his decisions, especially on Moffat's goal-kicks. Finally Captain Bird asked the referee to resign, but Captain Terry refused to accept his resignation. Play was continued until darkness, when the referee declared it "no game," as two halves of forty-five minutes had not been played. Immediately Yale was challenged for another game one week later, but declined.

1885 The great event of the season of 1885 was the adoption of a new baseball constitution, providing for a Graduate Advisory Committee. The better management helped the efficiency of the team, and they finished second in the championship race. In one of the early games Bickham struck out nineteen men and made this the record for Princeton pitchers. On May 9 Bickham allowed Yale only three hits, and struck out fourteen men, but Princeton's poor support gave Yale five runs. Two days later Princeton defeated Brown, despite the efforts of the crowd to "rattle" the pitcher. On May 23 and June 1 Harvard defeated Princeton, chiefly by the latter's errors. There were no padded gloves, and the catcher's hands became so sore that he could not hold the balls. On June 1 Princeton defeated Yale, 11—5, by puzzling pitching and excellent base-running. The last game was also a victory. It was Yale's Class Day, and Princeton won, 15—13. The game was of course exciting, but because of bad rather than good plays.

In the Intercollegiate track games Princeton reached the last place, being seventh in the list of contesting colleges, with one second prize in the quarter-mile run and a third place that did not count in the pole vault.

Despite the success of last year, interest in lacrosse seemed to lag, and only five games were played, with two victories over New York University and defeats by Harvard and the Druids of Baltimore.

The football dispute of 1884 concerning the referee had led to an investigation by the Faculty, and later the Association took the matter up, deciding to have one referee, a college graduate, who should be paid, and whose decisions should be final. Various penalties for the infringement of rules were added, perhaps to quell the public press, which was ranting about the brutal, ungentlemanly game. This season may very properly be called Lamar's year, for the records of the games, from practice games up, are not much more than catalogues of his runs and kicks. By the action of her Faculty Harvard was prevented from playing any intercollegiate games this season, and for a time it seemed as if the Princeton-Yale game might not be played. First, the Trustees refused to allow the team to play in New York because of the discredit cast upon the college by the unpleasant publicity and false assertions made in the press concerning the game of 1884. The matter was referred to a committee of the Faculty, who, after much consultation, granted permission that the game be held in New York for this year only, provided it was not played on Thanksgiving Day. Accordingly the game was arranged for Saturday, November 21, in New York. A few weeks before the time, the college was startled by receiving word from Yale that if the game was to be played in New York it must be on Thanksgiving Day; but if Princeton insisted on November 21, it must be played in New Haven. The only excuse that Yale gave for this summary action was that if the game was held in New York all the Yale students could not attend without cutting some recitations. Rather than sacrifice the game, and perhaps in consideration of Yale's championship, Princeton indignantly yielded, and went to New Haven on November 21. The Faculty expressed their approbation of and sympathy with the team by suspending all college exercises for the day. Fully three hundred and fifty students accompanied the team, and at New York they were joined by eight hundred alumni. In the first half all of Princeton's trick plays and formations fell flat, and their spirit seemed gone, because of the unfair, yet legal, interference of the Yale centre with the ball when it was about to be snapped back. However, the determination to win under any difficulties, yet with gentlemanly playing, appeared in the second half, and the game was won by the wonderful run with which Lamar terminated his brilliant football career. On the Princeton twenty-yard line he caught the ball on a dead run, and, dodging through the entire Yale team, scored the winning touchdown. Yale had played a dogged, time-killing game, full of scrimmage-plays, while Princeton played a more open game of kicks and end-runs.

1886 The early baseball games of the season were marked by poor playing, and especially by the utter lack of all discipline or team play. The first Yale game was stopped by rain, but the first Harvard game was won by Princeton by the score of 3—0. The record of the season is chiefly the record of the pitcher, D. D. Bickham, '86. On May 26 Amherst could get only one base-hit, and only one error was made by Princeton. The second game with Brown was won by Princeton. Both teams played much better than in the first Brown game, when Princeton made ten runs and six errors, and Brown six runs and nine errors. In this game Princeton made four runs and only one error, and Brown made four errors but no runs. On May 31 the second Harvard game lasted fourteen innings before Wiestling scored the winning run for Harvard. Princeton played a wonderful uphill game, for at the end of the third inning the score was 5—0 in favor of Princeton. At the end of the sixth it was 5—5. Then Harvard made another run, but in the ninth Princeton tied the score again. Then followed two defeats by Yale, 8—9 and 2—12. The catchers could not hold Bickham. It was due to this that the championship was lost. Bickham had a very swift delivery, which battered up the catcher's hand very badly, for at this time there were no mitts of any sort. The season closed with victories over Amherst and Williams, both of which were members of the Intercollegiate Association.

There ought not to be any mention of track games this year, for Princeton did not win a single point in the games, and so could not claim even last place. The interest in these sports had vanished, though the programs of all the regular college games were carried out perfunctorily.

Although Princeton made a very fair showing in lacrosse, Harvard won the championship. The only game of present interest was that against Yale on May 1, when Princeton won by 4—0. This unconditional defeat by Princeton put an end to the sport at Yale, where it had always been called the "refuge of invalid athletes."

The football season began with a complete reorganization of the team, as seven of the eleven had graduated. Harvard had been reinstated in the Association, and played Princeton on Nov. 13. Their team play excited the praise of the audience, while Princeton excelled in running and dodging. Short, hard rushes yielded two touchdowns for Princeton, but Harvard could make no headway against the opposing rushers. There was a great deal of unpleasant bickering over the Yale game. Acting in accordance with the demands of self-respect, Princeton insisted that the Yale game should be played in Princeton with a Princeton referee, for Yale had forced Princeton to play the last game at New Haven with a Yale referee. This year Yale made a counter-proposal to play in New York with a Princeton referee or in Princeton with a Yale referee. But the Faculty had decided that the game must be played in Princeton or New Haven.

So Princeton refused the Yale proposition, and it looked as if there would be no game. Finally the matter was referred to a committee of three graduates from the two colleges and Harvard, which accepted Princeton's conditions. It was a disappointing game in the mud. Princeton won a touchdown, but failed to kick goal. Then, in the last part of the last half, when it grew dark, the crowd surged on the field, the ball was fumbled, and Savage fell on it, but a Yale man claimed it, and the referee gave it to Yale. However, the game had to be called because of the darkness, and was declared "no game." Consequently no championship was awarded.

1887 The old Intercollegiate Baseball Association was abandoned this year, and a quadrangular league was formed between Yale, Harvard, Columbia, and Princeton. But Columbia, however, dropped out the next year. It was planned that each college should play four games with each of the others. But Princeton played only two games with Columbia, winning both, and only three with Harvard, losing two. The trouble was that the team was raw and undeveloped. The first Yale game on April 30 was very close. Yale scored one run in the second and another in the fourth, but Princeton made her first run in the ninth, when Yale played loosely. At the end of the inning Wagenhurst reached third on an overthrow and started home, but was put out. The umpire at first allowed the run because the ball had been "blocked," but later reversed his decision. The men could not hit Stagg, who allowed only two hits and struck out ten men. Harvard won the first two games, which were very much alike in hits and errors, but entirely different in runs: the first score was 1—3 and the second 11—18. The scores of the remaining games were all large. The third Harvard game was won by the score of 11—10. The errors for Princeton were fewer and the hits more frequent. The season closed with three defeats by Yale. The score of the first game, 15—0, is deceiving, for the game was interesting, especially until the fifth and sixth innings, when Princeton became rattled, and Yale scored eleven runs. Yale played an errorless game, and Stagg allowed only one hit. The next game was more even, for Yale made more errors, but still won, 9—3; but in the final game Yale showed her superiority and easily scored the fourth victory of the season over Princeton.

This season there was a little improvement in the athletic games, for Princeton won second place in the tug of war and was ranked last in a list of six. The next season of 1888 was a repetition of 1886, not a single point being scored in the intercollegiate games.

Lacrosse was still continued, though with even less success. The team was defeated by the Druids of Baltimore, by Harvard, and by the New York Club, but won from Lawrenceville and the University of New York.

This was a most discouraging football season, for Princeton was defeated by both Harvard and Yale. Judging from the practice games this was not unexpected. Early in the Harvard game Cowan, Princeton's strongest rusher, was ruled off for unintentional fouling, and this seemed to demoralize the team. The Yale game was won by their superior kicking and skill in following the ball, while Princeton depended unsuccessfully on rush-line tactics. It was the most scientific game ever played at that date. Princeton, for instance, employed the "V" trick again and again for gains, only to lose the ball to Yale, who recovered the ground by punting.

1888 Columbia dropped out of the baseball league, and Princeton met Yale and Harvard each four times on the diamond. Great expectations were held for the veteran team, and there was great rejoicing when the first Yale game was won, 6—5. Then came the reaction caused by over-confidence and especially by lack of harmony among the players. Yale won all the remaining games by the scores of 4—10, 3—7, and 1—9, and Harvard won all the Harvard games, 3—9, 0—11, 4—15, and 2—7. The best players wanted to resign in order that the team might be reorganized, and when they were persuaded to remain they played only half-heartedly, and the consequence was the worst season in Princeton's baseball history.

The lacrosse team had been organized for the year in the fall, but the only games were defeats by the Druids and South Bostons. The spring opened with the veteran team defeating Rutgers twice and Lehigh. This was followed by the victory of the Druids. Then came two more victories, and for the second time in her history Princeton had won the college championship in lacrosse.

Again we are compelled to chronicle a gloomy football season. In the early games the teams showed a lamentable absence of discipline and ignorance of the game. At this time all the coaching at Princeton devolved on the captain, although Yale and Harvard had their graduate coaches. The Harvard game was won by the heavier rush-line, against which the light Harvard men were unable to advance. But there was considerable loose and rough playing on both sides, and Princeton's backs were very weak, poorly supporting each other. The flying "V" formations came into use, which soon led to the adoption of an elaborate system of interference, though Yale led in this development. The men began to arrange themselves in definite positions, and when on the defensive a half-back would be close up to the rush-line. Formerly individual play had counted; now everything depended on team-plays. The Yale game was played on the Saturday before Thanksgiving, and resulted in a victory for Yale of 10—0. Yet this score by no means represented the merits of the teams. The umpire was undoubtedly partial, for, though he penalized both teams, yet the penalties on Princeton always came when they had the ball within a short distance of the goal, while Yale was penalized in the centre of the field. Time and again the strong Princeton line would advance down the field only to lose the ball on alleged fouling. Yale won by her full-back, Bull, who dropped two goals and made many punts during the game.

1889 The first baseball championship game in 1889 was against Harvard, and resulted in an easy victory for Princeton of 11—2. Princeton was not able to hit the ball at critical moments. Only one of the eleven runs was earned, for Harvard played a very poor fielding game. One week later Harvard won the second game by the score of 6—9. Princeton made eight errors and gave Harvard thirteen hits, three of which were made in the tenth inning and brought in the three winning runs. In the first inning of the third Harvard game, on May 30, Harvard scored five runs on five base-hits and a base on balls. In the fourth inning Harvard scored its sixth and last run. Princeton made two runs in the first, one each in the fifth and sixth, and earned three runs in the eighth, which gave Princeton the victory, 7—6. Two days later Harvard won the fourth game, 4—3, and as no fifth game could be arranged the two colleges were tied for second place in the championship, as Yale had won three out of four games with Princeton. In the first game, on May 8, the heavy batting—Yale making sixteen and Princeton fifteen hits—and the unreliable fielding of both nines made the game very exciting. The lead changed four times, and until the last man was out it was anyone's game. The score was 14—11 in Princeton's favor. The second game, on May 20, was won by Yale, 12—9. From the first inning until the last man was out in the tenth, it was an uphill struggle for Princeton, but the game was well played. Starting with a lead of four runs to overcome, Princeton was ahead at the end of the fourth inning. Again in the ninth, when Yale led by three runs, the nine took a brace and caused the wildest excitement by batting out enough runs to tie the score. But in the tenth a base on balls and two hits gave Yale three runs. In the field, with the bases constantly full, Princeton played very pluckily. The third game was won by Yale, 13—1, chiefly on the errors of the in-field. The final game, despite the rain, was very close, and it lasted eleven innings before Yale won, 6—5. Yale, though out-batted and out-fielded, won the game by magnificent base-running and by a lucky hit in the ninth inning.

Princeton again took a place in the Intercollegiate games this season, being in fact awarded fourth place. Dohm, '90, began to make his brilliant records for Princeton when he won first place in the 440-yard dash. Janeway took first place putting the shot, and the team came out second in the tug of war.

In the fall of 1889 the lacrosse team astonished themselves by defeating their old antagonists, the Druids, of Baltimore. Then followed two tie-games with a Brooklyn club. In the spring Rutgers, Lehigh, and Stevens were defeated; and later Harvard was defeated, and again Princeton rejoiced in the championship.

The football season of 1889 is noted for the weakness of the teams of Yale, Harvard, and Princeton, and for the fight against "professionalism," which resulted in Harvard withdrawing from the Intercollegiate League. As a result Princeton did not meet Harvard again in football until 1892, nor in baseball until 1895. Yale started the discussion by asking for a convention, in which severe rules of eligibility were recommended. Then Harvard protested certain Princeton players, and Princeton certain Harvard men. However, the game was played before any official action could be taken. Harvard had the advantage of the first half, but Princeton woke up in the second, and won chiefly by the help of Ames's terrific rushes and phenomenal kicking. In the early part of the Yale game there was a good deal of fumbling, but in the second half Princeton excelled at kicking and rushing, thus winning the game. Princeton introduced an elaborate system of end-plays and perfected what is known as "modern interference." The dispute with Harvard ran on all winter, and the newspapers were filled with comments.* The only satisfactory result was that the new rules of eligibility were adopted and enforced.

1890 As all athletic relations with Harvard had been severed, the only important games were against Yale, and all four proved to be intensely exciting. In the first game, on May 3, all the runs were made on errors, and as Princeton made eight of these, Yale won, 3—2. The second game was won by Princeton by the remarkable score of 1—0. Twice since, on May 23, 1892, and May 18, 1895, a Princeton-Yale game had closed with the same score, but both times Yale has won. Both teams played with rare skill and energy, Princeton making one error and six hits, and Yale two each. The one run was not made until the eighth inning, when Brokaw scored after two passed balls and two base-hits. The third Yale game was played in New York, and until the seventh inning Princeton was ahead. But Yale's captain saved a defeat by wonderful base-running in the eighth inning, which tied the score. Princeton had gained a lead in the ninth when the game was stopped by rain, and the official score was the tie of the eighth inning. The last Yale game in Brooklyn was one of the most exciting games ever played between Yale and Princeton. At the end of the third inning the score was 3—0 in Yale's favor, but in the next three innings Princeton had tied the score. Yale regained her lead by two in the eighth inning, and Princeton was able to score only one in the ninth. Thus the most remarkable series of Yale games ended. Yale had won two and lost one, and the fourth was a draw with the advantage for Princeton.

Interest in track athletics seemed to revive under the guidance of W. C. Dohm. Last year the old preliminary intercollegiate games had been abandoned, but this spring a new series of open handicap games was inaugurated, to be held just before the Mott Haven games. In the Mott Haven games Princeton scored 24 points, Yale 29 1-2, and Harvard 32. Cary took second prize in both the 100 and the 220-yard dash, Janeway was first in the shot-put, Roddy second in the 440-yard dash, Jefferson second in throwing the hammer, Borchering third in the mile walk, while Dohm reduced the record of the half-mile to 1 minute 57 1-5 seconds, besides winning first place in the running broad jump.

The spring of 1890 was the last season of lacrosse. The grounds were not large enough to permit the practice and training of the baseball, track and lacrosse teams. As the latter was the weakest it was dropped, first from the Princeton Athletic Association, then from the Intercollegiate Association, and finally it ceased entirely even as an independent sport. The last season of lacrosse consisted of six games, two victories over Stevens and Staten Island, and four defeats by Brooklyn, Druids, Johns Hopkins and Lehigh. The result of these last two games was the discontinuance of lacrosse as a college sport at Princeton. It irritated a Princetonian to be beaten in lacrosse by colleges whose football and baseball teams could hardly furnish practice games. The cause of the team's poor play was lack of practice. The baseball and track teams used the ground all day long when classes were not in session. The lacrosse team, as the weakest organization, could play only during lunch-time.

The football season of 1890 opened with only four of the old players in college, and the account of the season is one continuous wail of despair, culminating in the greatest defeat ever received from Yale. One trouble seemed to be that too much time was taken in sorting out the candidates, and the team was not selected until the day before the break up game. This prevented all team play; in fact the team that met Yale had never played together before. Yale completely outclassed Princeton in every respect and played a far more scientific game. In the second half Captain Poe did not attempt to rush the ball at all, but as soon as Princeton received the ball it was passed back for a kick.

1891 The efforts of the Harvard undergraduates, through the courtesy of Yale, to arrange a Princeton-Harvard series of baseball games, was so arbitrarily cancelled by their Advisory Committee that Yale felt compelled to give up her Harvard series. Yale won the first game in the Princeton series, because Princeton became "rattled" in the eighth inning and gave Yale four unearned runs. But in the second game Princeton retrieved herself, winning by the score of 5—3, in the game which has always been called the "King" game, because Phil. King, '93, brought in four of the five Princeton runs. The final game was won by Princeton by the score of 5—2, and Princeton won first place in the college series for the first time in eleven years.

Princeton retained third place in the intercollegiate games this year, and also broke another record, Cary running the 100-yard dash in ten seconds flat. Vredenburg and Swain took second prizes, and in the 220-yard dash Cary and Vredenburg took first and third prizes. The score by points was: Harvard, 46; Yale, 25; Princeton, 22.

Despite the "green" team of last year, there were six places to fill in the football team of 1891. Princeton changed her style of play from an open game of kicks and end runs to line-bucking and line-interference. But Yale so far excelled Princeton in team-interference that she easily rolled up a score of 19—0. Yale's motto seemed to be "Every man in his proper place in every play," and again Princeton was outclassed.

1892 In the spring of 1892 Harvard again met Princeton on the baseball diamond after an interval of two years, and won both the games. In the first game Harvard made eleven base-hits and Princeton only three, and the score was 11—5. In the second game at Cambridge on Decoration Day Princeton scored the first run in the second inning. But until the ninth inning not another Princeton man reached second base, but then three runs were scored on errors, making a final score in Harvard's favor 9—4. Three games were played with Yale. The first, at New Haven on May 21, resulted in the remarkable score of 1—0 in Yale's favor. This run was forced in by bases on balls in the fifth inning. But, except this, both pitchers had excellent control over the ball, several times retiring the side by striking out the batter when a runner was on third base. The second game at Princeton on June 11 was won by Yale by the small score of 3—1. A third game was played in New York one week later, which Princeton won by the large score of 12—2.

For the third year Princeton came out third in the Intercollegiate Track games and broke a record. This year Borchering won the mile walk in the remarkable time of 6 min., 52 4-5 sec. The score by points was not so flattering,—Harvard, 48 2-3; Yale, 38; Princeton, 14. Still a large number of men were training carefully, and the prospect was bright.

An attempt was made to reinstate the Princeton-Harvard football games, but the proposal was declined, because Harvard insisted on playing on Thanksgiving Day, which by the rules of the Intercollegiate Association was reserved for the Princeton-Yale game. The team was composed of veterans, but this did not prevent them from being defeated for the first time in their history by the representatives of the University of Pennsylvania. Their opponents outweighed them eighteen pounds to the man, and in the first half had the advantage of very strong wind. This defeat aroused great criticism, and the general opinion said that it was due to Princeton's lack of development in the science of the game during the last three years. In the Yale game the individual playing of almost every one was of the highest order, but there was no team work of systematic interference. Princeton did not seem to have profited by the recent defeats. Again Yale won, 12—0.

1893 In all the baseball games of 1893 the Princeton men played well individually, but lacked any team play. An exciting game was won from Cornell on April 29 in the eleventh inning by the score of 3—2. The first Harvard game on May 6 was won by Harvard, 7—0, because they completely outclassed Princeton. Harvard won also the final game on May 30 at Cambridge, but this was far more exciting. In the first inning Princeton scored three runs, but Harvard followed with four. At the end of the sixth inning Princeton led by one run, but Harvard scored the winning run in the ninth on an error, and the game closed in their favor, 9—8. In the first Yale game the Yale pitcher, Carter, struck out sixteen men; consequently Princeton made few hits in a one-sided game, though the score was small, only 1—5 in favor of Yale. The same pitching won the second game on June 10. Princeton excelled Yale in play, making the same number of errors, making four more hits, and leaving six more men on bases than Yale; but the trouble was that the hits could never be made when the men were on bases. The score was 2—0, for Princeton's errors gave Yale two runs. The third game was also won by Yale, 14—7.

Princeton dropped one place in the Mott Haven games of '93, for the University of Pennsylvania was beginning that remarkable stride which has kept it at the head of the list for recent years. The score of the first four was: Yale, 47 1-2; Harvard, 34 5-6; University of Pennsylvania, 11; Princeton, 10.

There was a decided stiffening in the method of football training this year. Each man was required to be in his bed at the club-house at 10:30, to arise at 7. Many graduates came back to coach, and the whole body of undergraduates and alumni woke up to the fact that Princeton had been beaten for three years. Earnest, determined work was begun at once, and after a long season it resulted in a victory over Yale. The team was thought to be the strongest that Princeton had ever put into the field, both physically and scientifically. The victory can be traced to the great strength of the rush-line in both offensive and defensive play, the well-developed system of interference, the ground-gaining and tackling abilities of the backs, and the unfailing certainty with which the whole team picked out the man with the ball. Yale depended chiefly on mass-plays, but the Princeton line broke through and tackled the man with the ball before the formation was completed. The one score was made by advancing the ball steadily down the field by mass-plays on tackle and the new "Princeton tandem" formation. But Princeton showed in this game that, far from being a straggler, she was leading in the scientific development of the game.

1894 The baseball season opened with bright prospects, for Harvard was defeated on May 5 by the score of 12—5. The game was won really in the seventh inning, when Harvard failed to get a man farther than first base and Princeton made runs almost at will. The second Harvard game, on May 30, was won by Harvard by a score of 10—4. The third and deciding game, at New Haven, was won by Princeton by the score of 11—4. At the beginning it looked like a victory for Harvard, which had made four runs in the third inning, but Princeton made seven runs in the next two innings and settled the game. Princeton was defeated by the strong Brown team on May 12, by the score of 5—6, but on June 4 Brown suffered a defeat of 4—3. The Yale games began on May 21, at New Haven, with a victory for Yale of 5—3; but the second game at Princeton, on June 9, was won by the wonderful batting of Mackenzie, who, twice when Ward was on first base, knocked a home-run and scored the four runs for Princeton; Yale made only two. The deciding game in Brooklyn, on June 16, was won by Yale, 9—5.

This was the black year for Princeton in the Inter-collegiate games, for not a point was scored, though such a small college as Amherst received a place in the list of eleven.

In the fall, P. King, '93, was appointed head coach and given absolute control of the training of the football team. In accordance with the recommendations of a graduate committee, the rules were amended to prohibit momentum mass-plays, and to encourage kicking and a more open style of play. The old rules, however, governed the game at Trenton with the University of Pennsylvania. They defeated Princeton by their "guards back" formation, to which in late years so much attention has been given. Then, too, the Princeton line gave little or no protection to their backs. The Princeton men were in wretched condition, and it was reported they had been badly poisoned by too large quantities of tea. Certainly something was the matter in the Yale game. It was an exhibition of skill and the best of generalship against weakness. Princeton had little team-play and lots of fumbles. Yale, on the other hand, made her greatest gain by kicks which the weak rushes of Princeton were unable to block. The game had scarcely started when Yale blocked a kick, and in two minutes two rushes through the centre yielded a touchdown. Before the game ended Yale had scored 24 points and Princeton had never reached nearer to Yale's goal than the ten-yard line. With one short exception the play was always in Princeton's territory.

1895 The nine of 1895 was not chosen until late in the season, and everyone was given a generous opportunity of showing his ability. After sixteen practice games Princeton defeated Harvard, 7—2, on May 11. Princeton scored one run in the first inning, and the other runs were all made in the fifth, when Harvard's pitcher became "rattled." The second Harvard game was also won by Princeton, 14—2; the team was disconcerted by the loss of the captain and by the unfortunate decisions of the umpire. The best game of the season was of course the first Yale game on May 18, when for a second time in her history Yale defeated Princeton 1—0. The teams were very evenly matched and whatever advantage Yale had in the pitcher's box was counterbalanced by Princeton's strength in the field. Yale's one run was made in the seventh inning after two mistakes in judgment by Princeton. In the second Yale game, on June 8, Princeton made seven runs in the first two innings. Then pitchers were changed and Princeton scored only one more run. In the third, Yale knocked Easton out of the box for three runs;

then Altman began to pitch; but in the sixth, Yale secured four runs. The third pitcher, Wilson, was then sent to the box and held Yale down to one hit in the last three innings. Princeton could not overcome Yale's lead, and the game resulted in a victory of 9—8 in favor of Yale, and Yale retained the pennant.

The least possible advance was made by Princeton in the Intercollegiate games of 1895, for the third prize was won in the running broad jump, giving Princeton one point and the tenth place in a list of eleven.

The football season of 1895 is marked by a renewal of the Princeton-Harvard matches, which had been broken off by the latter in the winter of '89. The Harvard challenge for November 2, 1895, was accepted, and the teams met in a game of "ideal, gentlemanly football." In the first half Harvard had a slight advantage, but Princeton outplayed her in the second half. Suter made a run of ninety-five yards in the first half, but Princeton lost the ball on downs. In the second half the Harvard line gave way, and Princeton scored three touchdowns, while Harvard made one from a blocked kick. The Yale game of November 23 was remarkable for the strong aggressive and weak defensive work of both teams. In the first half Yale scored two touchdowns—one on a fumble and the second by the fine dodging of Thorne after Yale had rushed the ball down field. Princeton began the second half with good gains from the revolving tandem, but wasted its strength in not kicking more frequently. Again and again Yale's goal was in danger, but when Princeton seemed on the verge of scoring it would lose the ball. However they made two touchdowns, one by line-bucking, the other on a blocked kick. For Yale, Thorne scored two touchdowns,—the first after a run of thirty-five yards, and the second just before the game closed, when, starting from the 45-yard line, he dodged the entire opposing eleven and crossed the Princeton goal-line. This made the final score 20—10.

1896 The baseball season of 1896 is remarkable for large scores and long games; there were two ten-inning games, one eleven-inning, and one of sixteen innings. In the early games Princeton was defeated by Cornell's wonderful pitcher and by the fielding of the University of Virginia. Princeton played Harvard four times and Yale five. The first Harvard game, on May 9, was rather one-sided; Princeton made five home-runs, and won by 17—4. The second Harvard game, on May 30, was the longest game in Princeton's history. In the first inning Harvard scored five runs off Easton; then Wilson began to pitch, and only one more run was scored, and that not until the fourteenth inning. In the fourth inning Princeton made four runs, then tied the score in the seventh. Three single hits in the fourteenth inning gave Princeton a lead, but Harvard immediately tied the score, and the brilliant game ended when Princeton scored two in the sixteenth. The third Harvard game, on June 10, was a great disappointment, as both teams played poorly. Harvard won, 5—8. The final Harvard game, on June 18, was won in the tenth inning by luck, for an easy ball hit the umpire, which gave the runner his base in safety. The Yale games were even more exciting and famous. In the first, on May 16, Princeton gave Yale the worst defeat she ever suffered from any rival in the "thirteen to nothing" game. Only twenty-nine Yale men came to the bat, sixteen struck out on Easton's pitching, two reached first base, and one got as far as second on the only base-hit made by Yale. The second game, on May 23, was won by Yale, 5—7. Princeton won the third game, on June 6, by the score of 5—0, although each team made two errors and twelve Princeton men struck out. The fourth game, in New York on June 13, went to Yale with the score 8—4. But the game was full of errors and loose playing. The final Yale game was played in New Haven on Class Day, and the score stood 3—3 from the seventh to the eleventh inning. Then Trudeau made a three-base hit, but Yale could not bring him in. Ward scored the winning run for Princeton on Kelly's hit. This was the first Commencement game at New Haven that Princeton had ever won from Yale, and of course this victory gave Princeton the pennant.

In the spring Yale and Princeton held a dual track meet, which Yale won, 87 points to 25. In the Intercollegiate games Colfelt won third place in the 440-yard dash, and Princeton, with one point, ranked eighth in a list of ten. But the writer can remember the satisfaction with which this one point was welcomed as a harbinger of the future—a token not to be despised.

Great interest was aroused in track athletics at Princeton when Princeton sent a team of four men, R. Garrett, '97; H. B. Jamison, '97; F. A. Lane, '97; A. C. Tyler, '97, to compete in the restored Olympian games at Athens, April 6 to 12. Garrett won second place in the running high jump and the running broad jump, and first place in putting the shot. But the greatest success was when Garrett won first prize in the old Greek game of throwing the discus.

The football season of 1896 opened with four places to fill on the team and a large number of candidates. Very little time was spent in learning trick plays, but all the men were thoroughly drilled in "straight football." This and good generalship won the Harvard game. It was Princeton's policy to kick, but in the first half the wind was so strong against them that they were forced to use line-plays. No gains could be made through the stiff Harvard line. Harvard lacked judgment in not kicking when the wind was in her favor. In the second half Harvard had worn her men out by line-rushes, while Princeton, which always kicked except when within striking distance of Harvard's goal, showed no signs of weakness. The first touchdown was scored by Bannard after an end-run of forty yards behind superb interference. Then, with the play in Harvard's territory, Princeton tried to block Harvard's kicks, and at last Church was successful, and Brokaw fell on the ball for the last Princeton touchdown. This same ability to play "straight football" under good generalship gave the Princeton team of 1896 the greatest victory ever won over a Yale team. Princeton began a kicking game, but, anticipating this, Yale had developed a strong, aggressive formation to block kicks. Twice Baird attempted to punt, only to have the kick blocked, and the second time Bass fell on it for a touchdown. Then Princeton changed her style of play to a running, rushing game, and, without losing the ball once, carried it down the field for a touchdown. Yale punted to the 25-yard line, Baird, who attempted to run it back, was tackled, but passed the ball to Smith, who ran seventy yards. Then a few line-plays, and Princeton had scored again. In the second half Princeton rushed the ball down the field twice; and the game closed 24—6 in favor of Princeton.

1897 The season of 1897 is noted for its exciting baseball contests. After nineteen practice games Princeton won the first Harvard game by excellent batting. Two weeks later, at Cambridge, Harvard won through the remarkable pitching of Paine. This necessitated a third game, which was played at New Haven three days later. Paine was unable to control the ball; two of his wild pitches directly aided Princeton in scoring the only two runs of the game. It took three games also to settle the Yale series, for Yale won the first game on June 5, at the end of the tenth inning, when, with two men out and two strikes called, Letton knocked a home-run and ended a game of breathless excitement. The second Yale game at Princeton, during Commencement, was easily won by Princeton, for the Yale pitcher was freely batted. The deciding game in New York was also won by Princeton. Yale seemed to be "rattled," and played as if in a practice game. In the fifth inning the Yale pitchers were changed, but it was too late. Princeton had already won the game by the score of 22—8, and with it the championship.

In the Mott Haven games Princeton made a rapid advance, and the new bulletin board of Princetonian was surrounded with cheering crowds when the news came that Princeton had won fourth place. The scores of the first four were University of Pennsylvania 35, Yale 26 1-2, Harvard 15 3-4. Yale was maintaining her usual place as second on the list, and the former champion, Harvard, was yielding for the first time to the new power in college athletics, the University of Pennsylvania, which carried off the greatest honors for the next few years. In the spring the Association had established a series of games that has proved very valuable to the University, the Interscholastic games, in which the leading athletes of all the eastern preparatory schools contend. They grow in popularity each year.

Two reasons are assigned for the loss of the Yale football game of 1897; over-confidence and over-training. The team was composed of veterans who won so much praise in the early games that they ceased to work hard; and they were also put into condition too early in the season. In the Lafayette game they were in the pink of condition, but in the two weeks before the Yale game came the usual slump: the waiting killed their fire and force, and the nervous tension sapped their spirit. In the beginning of the game Princeton excelled in kicking and Yale fumbled badly in catching, but when the two lines met, Princeton always yielded. After nine minutes of play in the second half Yale scored through the line. Without its captain and some of its best players the Princeton team played desperately and managed to carry the ball out of Princeton's territory. Then came a fumble, and Princeton's last chance was gone.

There was no Princeton-Harvard game, because Harvard thought it impossible to play three important games in one season.

1898 The first interesting game of the baseball season of 1898 was the defeat of Cornell, 3—0. A few days later Brown defeated Princeton, 7—6, in a twelve-inning game. Princeton easily won both the Harvard games, 12—2 and 9—2. Yale also was easily defeated in the first game on June 4, the score being 12—7. Princeton scored eleven runs before a single Yale man had crossed the home plate. A new Yale pitcher went into the box in the sixth inning, and after that Princeton made only one more run. Yale won the second game, 4—6, at Princeton. Princeton took the lead in the third inning, only to lose it at once. In the fourth inning Princeton tied the score, and in the fifth added another run, which, however, was Princeton's last. Before the close of the inning Yale tied the score, and in the next two innings increased her tally to six. The final game in New York was won by Yale, 3—8, and the championship pennant went to Yale.

Princeton made a still better showing in the Mott Haven games of 1898, winning second place with 28 points, the University of Pennsylvania scoring 50 3-4. Harvard followed with 25 5-6, and Yale 22 2-3. Rush took second prizes in the dashes, Jarvis first in the 440-yard run, and Cregan first in the half and full mile. Then Potter won second in the hammer-throwing, and Ripley scored the other points in the bicycle events.

Remembering the experience of 1897, the coaches were careful that the early football games of 1898 should be merely practice games, and that the team should not be in the pink of condition until they met Yale. This explains the small scores of the early games; the men were not allowed to batter themselves to pieces early in the season. Yale excelled in the line, Princeton in her backs. Consequently Princeton could gain little by rushing; in fact most of her games were by running back-punts. The victory was due to Princeton's team-play and quickness in taking advantage of Yale's fumbles. Early in the game Yale fumbled on Princeton's 12-yard line, and Poe grabbed the ball and dodged away. After a run of ninety-five yards he scored the only touchdown of the game. In the second half Yale played a fierce offensive game, carrying the ball to Princeton's 20-yard line, where Poe again secured the ball and ran the length of the field, but was called back by the umpire, for the ball had been "down." Again the ball was carried down to Princeton's 15-yard line, but lost by Yale on downs. Just before time was called Princeton secured the ball on Yale's 4-yard line, and tried to back the centre, but the strong line held, and Yale got the ball on downs.

1899 The season of 1899 in baseball is noted for the defeats by small colleges. Three times was Princeton defeated by Georgetown, once each by Cornell, Lehigh, Pennsylvania State College, and Brown. The first Brown game at Providence was won by Princeton, 8-2, but ten days later, at Princeton, Brown won, 6-3. The first Harvard game, on May 13, was well played until the sixth inning; then the Harvard pitcher lost control of the ball and Princeton scored five runs. The final score was 10-2. Princeton won also the second Harvard game by the score of 12-2. In the first Yale game, on June 3, at New Haven, Princeton was not able to make a single hit off Robertson. Only four men reaching first and two second base, while the Princeton pitcher allowed six bases on balls and nine hits, made two wild pitches, and hit three men. The final score was 8-0 in Yale's favor. But in the seventh inning of the second Yale game at Princeton, Robertson, of the Freshman Class at Yale, became "rattled" and allowed four Princeton men to score. He rallied later, but not before two more runs had been added and the score was 6-2 in Princeton's favor. In the third and declining Yale game Princeton won by snappy playing, while both of Yale's pitchers proved ineffective. The final score was 11-4.

In 1899 Princeton won fourth place in the Intercollegiate games with 11 points, the University of Pennsylvania led with 57, then Harvard 28, and Yale 23 1-2.

The football season of 1899 was full of surprises, chief of which was the defeat by Cornell. Although Cornell's score was made on a drop-kick, yet its team played better than the Princeton eleven, for the Cornell goal was never in danger. But by the Indian game Princeton was playing better and kept the ball in the enemy's territory all the time. The Yale game was played at New Haven and won by Princeton 11-10. Each side scored a touchdown and a goal from field, but Yale missed the try at goal. Princeton excelled Yale in rushing. In the beginning of the game, Suter, aided by magnificent interference, broke through the Yale line and ran thirty-five yards before he was downed on the 2-yard line. Three rushes yielded the touchdown and a goal. Yale then changed her tactics, and, instead of trying to rush the strong Princeton line, began to punt at every opportunity. Yale scored on a blocked kick, and before the half closed Sharpe had kicked a goal from the field. The score stood at 10-6 until one minute of time in the second half. Princeton was now playing with seven substitutes, and the ball was theirs on Yale's 35-yard line. Then Poe kicked a goal from the field, and Princeton won, 11-10. For the first time in her history Yale had been beaten by the same rival in two consecutive years.

1900 The first big baseball game of 1900 was the victory over Cornell on May 2, the score being 11-7. At the beginning of the sixth inning the score stood 10-0 in favor of Princeton. Then two bases on balls, an error, and two hits gave Cornell six runs. After two excellent games with Lafayette and Holy Cross, the team was defeated by Brown, 6-1. Brown was strong at the bat, and played an almost faultless game in the field, while Washburn's pitching throughout was steady and effective. But Princeton won the second game, 11-6. On May 26 Harvard defeated Princeton in a well-played game, which was won on its merits, the score being 4-0. It was a pitchers battle throughout. Princeton made four hits to Harvard's three, but Stillman struck out ten men to Hillebrand's six. But Princeton won the second game on Commencement Day, 9-2. The first Yale game at New Haven was won by Princeton through hard and timely hitting, efficient battery work, and swift base-running, the score being 9-3. The second and final Yale game was played at Princeton the Saturday before Commencement.

Yale scored once in the first inning and twice in the fifth inning, but the ninth inning began with the score 3—0 in favor of Yale. Then Princeton began to bat, and Robertson lost control of the ball. One run was made, then another and another, until the side was retired with the score 5—3 in favor of Princeton. Yale tried hard in its half, but only scored one run, and Princeton was the champion.

In the track games of 1900 Princeton made a better showing than for many years. After winning the dual meets with the University of California and Cornell, Princeton won the Intercollegiate two-mile relay race, and took second place in the Intercollegiate games, scoring 25 points, while the University of Pennsylvania made 39 and Yale 20 1-2. The Olympian games were held in Paris this year, and Princeton sent the following team: J. F. Cregan, '99; F. W. Jarvis, '00; W. C. Carroll, '00; A. W. Coleman, '02; D. S. Horton, '03, and J. M. Perry, '03. Jarvis won the 100-metre race, and Cregan finished second in the half-mile, but the other men refused to compete, as the other trials were held on Sunday, contrary to the agreement.

The football team of 1900 was handicapped greatly by the loss of five men from its line and two backs. But the team worked earnestly under the advice of many coaches. The first shock came on November 3, when Cornell won, 12—0. By superior all-round play Cornell scored two touchdowns in the first half, and though Princeton was within striking distances of Cornell's goal several times, a fumble or four downs invariably gave the ball to Cornell. Then came the Columbia disaster, 6—5 in favor of Columbia. In the first half Columbia scored a touchdown and goal; in the second Princeton scored a touchdown, but was not allowed to try for the goal on a doubtful decision of the referee. Both teams played very aggressively in one of the fastest and hardest games of the season. The final Yale game on November 17 at Princeton was won by Yale, 29—5. The light and inexperienced Princeton team was no match for the uncommonly heavy, veteran Yale eleven, and after the first ten minutes the outcome was a foregone conclusion. Princeton played pluckily and desperately, but could only score one goal from the field. Yale's veteran team was perfectly developed, playing a rushing game of perfect formation and irresistible force that knocked aside the lighter Princetonians. The season had shattered two traditions: that Princeton could not be beaten on her own grounds nor when the captain was a Junior.

THE PRINCETON SYSTEM OF ATHLETIC MANAGEMENT.

Able management is absolutely essential to success in any branch of athletics. A team may be composed of "star" players, but if it is poorly organized and managed it will fail. Each of the universities with their large number of students has very little advantage over the others in the mere material from which to develop its teams. The more important problem is how that material is to be developed and handled, for the best disciplined and managed team will win the championship. An authority writes:

"When one considers this, and also remembers the remarkable advance of individual skill in each branch of athletics, the first thought is, Why is it that the management as well as the sport does not improve until the contest becomes closer? Why do we see processions on the river? Why do we see pitiable incompetency on the field? One strong reason is that the general college public know little and care less about the management of their athletic interests. They note and speak of any very evident lack of command in a captain, but apart from that they think but little of the general management of their organizations. Sometimes, owing to an unexpected series of disasters to some college in athletics matters, public sentiment is aroused from its usual apathy and demands action. Then there is a great semblance of reform, and a graduate committee is established from which wonderful things are expected. To this committee is given more or less power according to the exigencies of the case. The following year there is a great hue-and-cry that the graduates are trying 'to run things,' and then the popular action for the captain and managers is to entirely ignore the advice of this body. The committee stands on little ceremony when its advice is unheeded, and resigns its powers, and the undergraduate again assumes his 'rights.' Beyond this seesaw of graduate and undergraduate supremacy very little of the affairs of management comes to the attention of the majority of the students or alumni."

Such is the common record of other colleges, but at Princeton the "seesaw" has settled into a stable equilibrium in the system of management, which is the acknowledged model for other colleges because it harmonizes and utilizes the experience of the alumni with the opportunity of the undergraduates. The system had been a gradual development, caused chiefly by defeat and debt. At first, of course, in the early days of Princeton's athletics, there was neither system nor organization; the best player was unconsciously allowed to act as leader. But as the numbers of the players increased, the skill of the best players became more nearly equal, so that another basis of selection had to be adopted. The first step in organization was taken when the players elected one of their number as captain, who had sole charge and management of the games and players. Then clubs were formed to meet the expenses by common assessment. These were organized with the offices of president, secretary, and treasurer, and a self-perpetuating, irresponsible board of directors holding office indefinitely. At first the board acted merely as advisors to the captain, but gradually, in the early 'seventies, the directors began to usurp the power of the captain until he became a mere figurehead, or at best only one of the board, which selected the team, arranged the contests, encouraged candidates, and chose the new captain and board.

The first change—in the Baseball Association at least—came in the season of 1876, when the recent defeats led to severe criticism of the management. The directors were not always expert in the game, and sometimes they were incapable of selecting the most skillful players. But oftener they were unfairly influenced in their selection by the claims or personal friendship and class spirit, which at this time ran so high that a director was forced to place as many as possible of his classmates on the team. Luckily, however, the Association was not self-supporting, though it was a "close corporation," accessible only through election, like the Glee Club of to-day. The students at large, whose contributions maintained the team, refused to subscribe further unless the existing self-perpetuating board of directors was abolished. Hereafter the directors were selected directly by the classes, to which they were immediately responsible. A year later their number was reduced to two,—a president from the Senior class and a treasurer from the Junior class. These offices have been continued down to the present time, although in 1894, for the sake of uniformity throughout all the Associations, the titles were changed to "manager" and "assistant manager."

In the Football Association the progress was less rapid, though practically the same. From 1869 to 1879 the team was selected and managed by a self-perpetuating, irresponsible committee, which in 1876 was changed to a board of directors, with a president or secretary and a treasurer. Their number was not reduced to two, however, until 1885; and in 1894 the uniform titles of "manager" and "assistant manager" were adopted.

The alumni were not admitted to a share in the management, other than making up the deficits, until the early 'eighties, when the Baseball Association sought their advice as well as their contributions. And the Association needed both badly, for not only was it laboring under a debt of $1,000, but the team was being defeated year after year. Incompetent management and inefficient organization robbed the latter of all chances of success. When the alumni were asked to relieve the Association of the debt, they criticised the management severely; for they felt that something must be done at once to redeem the honor of Princeton. They were willing to contribute if they could be assured that the debt had been unavoidable and not merely the result of carelessness. In response the Association, in the fall of 1884, elected an auditing committee, of which C. C. Cuyler, '79, was chairman. This remedy was ineffective, however, for it came too late; the undergraduates needed an advisory as well as an auditing committee to overcome the lack of foresight and the inexperience of the managers. Accordingly, in January, 1885, a Graduate Advisory Committee was elected, composed of A. Van Rensselaer, '71, D. Paton, '74, and C. C. Cuyler, '79. A new constitution was adopted by the Baseball Association which provided that:

"The nine shall be chosen by the captain, subject to the approval of the Graduate Advisory Committee.

"In case this committee should not approve of any choice of the captain, the power of decision of such disputed point shall reside in an undergraduate committee of three, consisting of the captain and two other members of the nine, who shall hold office throughout the season.

"In all questions relating to the management and policy of the nine, the captain shall have absolute authority unless the Graduate Advisory Committee shall disapprove—in which case the question in dispute shall be referred to the undergraduate committee.

"The Graduate Advisory Committee shall choose two members of the nine to serve with the captain as the undergraduate committee. The majority of their votes shall decide the question."

One of the ablest of football critics, a graduate of Yale, writing at the time, said:

"The graduate committee plan, while it cannot yet be called an absolute failure, because thus far the Princeton plan is untried, has up to this time certainly not carried out the desired end, for two reasons: first, graduates have never been given sufficient power by the undergraduates to ensure their handling the sports with responsibility; and secondly, the best men for the place cannot and will not serve on the committee. The undergraduate powers are seldom willing to adopt a line of action which may be dignified by the name of policy. Their thoughts are for the immediate present, and their work is for immediate results. This is why they are unwilling to give the graduates sufficient power to make their assistance of real service, for they believe that the aid they require is for to-day and not for next season. The graduates' demand, on the other hand, is almost as much inclined the other way. They wish a policy adopted which shall be an enduring one. They would sacrifice a prospective victory to the maintaining of a position once taken and considered right. And this brings us to the second reason for the failure of graduate committees—namely, the refusal of the best men to serve. They refuse because they know the fickleness of a college community. They know the weather-cock changeableness of college opinion. They realize that to maintain a consistent policy even for one season means to endure the ill will of the college public for at least half the time. Graduates may have a deep affection for their university, but there are few whose affection is of the kind that tempts them to put it to such tests as these."

The writer was not at that time so well acquainted with Princeton men as he has since become. At Princeton the best men were willing to serve on the committee, to give their time, year after year, to improving the athletic standing of their Alma Mater; and no better example of graduate devotion can be found than that of C. C. Cuyler, '79, who has faithfully and zealously served on the Graduate Advisory Committee since its inception. The constant personal attention of the committee has ensured a stable policy, which in almost every case even the undergraduates have acknowledged to be the best for "to-day" (the present season), and experience has shown its value for the next season.

This scheme was so well received that before the year closed the officers of the different athletic associations had agreed to extend the powers of the Graduate Advisory Committee to all the associations, thus giving it a general supervision over all the athletics of the college. Each member of the Graduate Advisory Committee was made a member of one of the three associations; Mr. Cuyler of the Track Association, Mr. Paton of the Football Association, and Mr. Van Rensselaer of the Baseball Association. This was the first definite movement toward the consolidation of the associations. In 1877, when the University grounds were opened, the officers of the various athletic associations had organized to control the field. At first there was a general conference, but later a representative of each association was appointed upon an executive committee which took charge of the grounds and general athletic interests of the college, and in 1886, in the general athletic reformation, this committee was permanently organized.

But the final and successful movement for consolidation was the result of a deficit in the Track Association and a contemporary surplus in the Football Association. In 1883 the Track Association made a fervent appeal to the New York alumni for aid, which was freely given. But it was very difficult to collect the subscriptions, for the alumni had learned that there was a large surplus in the treasury of the Glee Club and the Football Association. They felt that the undergraduates should help each other before appealing to the alumni. They proposed that all the athletic interests be consolidated; that each club have its own treasurer, who, after paying all legitimate expenses of his club, should turn the balance into the University Fund, which should be managed by a regularly elected officer, to be known as the University Treasurer. This would ensure better support for the combined associations, and the expenses would not be so great when one man managed all. This system was taken up by the Graduate Advisory Committee, and in February, 1886, the College adopted the following resolutions:

"That the associations retain their present organizations.

"That there be established an Executive University Committee, composed of the executives of the athletic associations, and that the college shall decide annually in mass meeting what association shall be represented on the committee.

"That the Executive Committee shall have no permanent chairman.

"That the Treasurer of the University Fund shall be elected by the Executive Committee, and shall be ex officio a member and the secretary of the committee. But that he shall not have the right to vote.

"That the treasurer of each association shall have custody of the funds of his association.

"That the treasurer of each association shall, at proper times, when requested by the University Treasurer, make to him a full report in writing of the financial condition of his association, and at the end of the season for the support of each association for the year. He shall pay over to the University Treasurer all balances remaining in his treasury, and shall submit to him his account for approval.

"That the University Treasurer shall have custody of all money coming into his hands as above provided, and shall hold and expend the same as directed by the Executive Committee. He shall countersign all checks of the different associations and audit their accounts. He shall when requested by the Executive Committee, at all proper times, make to it in writing a full report of the condition of his treasury and of that of any of the associations."

Of course this necessitated a new set of constitutions, which the associations immediately adopted. When this system went into effect the associations were $2,800 in debt, but this rapidly decreased each year. At the same time the Faculty appointed a Committee on Outdoor Sports. It is the duty of this committee to investigate the academic standing of the individual players, to see that the games and hours of training do not interfere with the curriculum, and to represent the Faculty in all questions of athletic management.

In the fall of 1886 the Football Association was severely criticised for completely ignoring the Graduate Advisory Committee and making all arrangements without consulting them. As a member said: "The Committee never has and does not claim the right of decision—but they should at least be consulted." Owing to the vaguely defined nature of the purpose for which the committee had been originally appointed, and because it possessed no executive power, some of its members considered it of little use to the undergraduates. This was especially true because of the growing disposition upon the part of the students to ignore it even as a body of advice, except when money was to be raised among the alumni. The trouble was that the powers of the committee had never been formulated, and it was not until March, 1888, that the present constitution was adopted, which gives the committee not only the power of advice, but of veto over the undergraduate management.*

In April, 1890, the Graduate Advisory Committee and the Executive Committee were amalgamated under the name of the Princeton University Athletic Association, in order to facilitate the issuing of bonds to pay for the improvements at the University Field, and in November, 1891, the Association was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey.

So far all the administrative work had been in the hands of the undergraduates, for the University Treasurer was a member of the Senior class. But the business became too large for an undergraduate to handle. About forty thousand dollars passed through his hands each year, and this involved an amount of time, a knowledge of business details, and a careful responsibility too great to impose upon or expect in an undergraduate. In January, 1894, the office of University Treasurer was abolished, and the present office of General Athletic Treasurer created. He must be a graduate, but must not be pursuing a regular course for a degree in college. He has full charge of all accounts and moneys handled by the various associations, and of the training-table, athletic grounds, buildings, and grand stands. He relieves the undergraduate of much of the routine work and enables a more systematic and businesslike supervision of the association. Harvard had preceded Princeton in this movement, but with several changes. At Harvard the athletic manager has practically the sole management of the various teams, thereby placing all questions of importance in the hands of the graduates, or individually in the hands of the manager himself. At Princeton the officer of each association has the balance of power, but the General Athletic Treasurer and the respective officers act as a check upon one another, thus ensuring careful and judicious conclusions.

The success of the Princeton system is very remarkable, viewed from the experience of other colleges, and can be explained only by attributing it to Princeton spirit. Take Yale, for instance:

"There is probably not another university in the land where students have more direct control of college athletics than Yale, where athletics are less under Faculty rules and where there is less friction as to athletics between students and Faculty. The policy of the Yale Faculty has been not to interfere with college sports while they do not interfere with the students' work or with good order on the campus after a victory. At Yale, moreover, there is no such system of graduate direction over all athletics as has been (1888) established at Harvard. On the contrary each association is a complete individuality, has separate offices, and acknowledges no responsibility to Faculty or any body of men save the students that constitute its membership. There is a graduate advisory committee, but it has no power, although its advice is often sought and accepted by the undergraduates."

But at Princeton, although the undergraduates retain the balance of power, yet a certain portion is granted to the alumni and to the Faculty. And during fifteen years of experience there has been almost no friction; every branch has performed its proper function. The Undergraduate Executive Committee has maintained its privileges and has rather overawed the graduates; the Faculty has asserted its right to determine who is qualified to represent the fair name of Princeton; and the Graduate Advisory Committee has not only maintained a settled policy by advising, but has refused to ratify the election of certain captains who, they thought, did not possess the necessary qualifications. The actions of all three branches have been received by the others and by the College at large with unquestioned faith and sincerity, because we all acknowledge that only one motive can direct a Princetonian in relation to his Alma Mater—Princeton Spirit, whether we analyze it as veneration, pride, and gratitude in the past, stubborn faith in the present, or ambition for the future.

THE ATHLETIC GROUNDS AND BUILDINGS OF PRINCETON.

Before sports were organized at Princeton any open space served for "grounds;" but the most popular place was the quadrangle between East and West Colleges. This was the scene of the early games of shinny, handball, football and jumping. About the middle of the century the match games were shifted to the field lying southwest of Clio Hall. Here was ample room for cricket and baseball. The players spent many pleasant hours there, though the field was rough and hilly. Left field was down over the hill in a marshy strip, and a long fly over the fence and upon the railroad tracks was easily good for a "homer." Right field was on the hill, and it took a wise man to gauge his steps and the ball together so that he would keep the one and not muff the other.

In the northeast corner of the field the students erected a handball alley in the year 1849, which remained until Dr. McCosh had it removed in 1870.

In 1859 the first gymnasium was erected, on the ground behind West College. It was a crude affair, of overlapping boards, thirty feet wide and seventy feet long, but large enough for the simple apparatus*. This building was finally destroyed by fire in the summer of 1865, and for three years the blackened ruins lay as a reproach to the students. Then, in 1868, Dr. James McCosh was inaugurated as President of the College, and in his first address he made an appeal for a new gymnasium. This was immediately answered by Mr. Robert Bonner and Mr. Henry G. Marquand, and in May, 1870, the present gymnasium was completed at a cost of thirty-two thousand dollars.† At the time it was the best college gymnasium in America, but the University has outgrown its capacity and all Princetonians are looking forward eagerly to the proposed new gymnasium.

In 1874 the third building for athletic purposes was erected, largely by the contributions of the alumni. It was the boat-house. The undergraduate of to-day is apt to forget that this belongs to the University, as it cannot be seen from the campus. But if he will go down Washington Street, past the Infirmary, on the left of the bridge over the canal, he will find it, in fair repair but not in use. A few old barges rest on the racks in undisturbed quiet, silent witnesses of the passing of rowing from Princeton.

The next advance was made by the Baseball Association. As their skill increased, the Nassau Baseball Club became dissatisfied with the rough, hilly field southwest of Clio Hall, and through the courtesy of the Princeton Club of the town, they arranged that all important games should be played on the Princeton grounds, which lay at the foot of Chambers Street and extended over to Bayard Lane. It was a good field but had almost no accommodations for players; in fact the only building was a ticket-office four by eight feet in area. The spectators were compelled to stand or to crowd together on the two rows of crude benches that ran east and west. The home-plate was situated in the southeast corner and the balls were batted northwest, directly toward the house that Prof. Henry van Dyke now occupies. In 1872 these grounds came to be regarded as the 'Varsity grounds, for the town club was dying slowly.

The Association was supposed to lease the field, but as a matter of fact no rent was paid. Notwithstanding this, the students were very careless in their use of the field, and in the spring of 1876 few were surprised when the owner of the property requested the Association to seek other quarters for the coming year. The undergraduates appointed the following committee to obtain new grounds: William Libbey, Jr., '77, Chairman; W. S. Throckmorton, '77; M. W. Jacobus, '77; J. Armstrong, '77; and R. M. Corwine, '78. It was decided to make an appeal to the alumni, and for this purpose one of the committee was sent to present the subject to the New York alumni at a Princeton dinner at Delmonico's. After a long dinner came the longer speeches; in fact one "old grad" was so garrulous that he drove the majority of the men out of the room, so that only a few sleepy alumni heard the plea of the undergraduate. They expressed lots of sympathy but did not promise any financial assistance. Despairing of help from this source, the committee turned to the University Hotel Company. At this time the University Hotel was in the height of its career, as a hotel, dormitory, and restaurant, and among its Board of Directors was the young chairman of this committee. He urged the Board to purchase a large tract of land where the present University Field is, for a truck farm or vegetable garden, and then proposed that they permit the students to use half of it for an athletic field. In retaliation they urged the students to buy the plot and rent the garden to them. However, the field was finally purchased, nominally by the Hotel Company, though the money was supplied by William Libbey, Jr., '77. The plot contained about ten acres, including all of the present field, except a narrow strip running along Prospect Avenue. Early in September the same friends advanced money to put the grounds in condition, and before the work was completed $13,000 had been expended. The grounds were graded, levelled and surrounded with a high fence and a small ticket-house placed at the foot of William Street. A quarter-mile track was built around the field, and a baseball diamond was carefully marked out, with the home-plate in the southeast corner, so that the balls were batted toward the entrance. In the southeast corner was a small but comfortable club-house, containing two very pleasant rooms, a reception-room, twenty by sixteen feet, and a dressing-room somewhat smaller. Adjoining this was built the "large," roofed grand stand capable of seating two hundred and fifty persons, which was then considered a large crowd of spectators. In 1877 these grounds were leased by the Association at a nominal rent, which, however, was seldom collected. This property was transferred to the Trustees of the University in 1888 with the University Hotel, as part of the endowment of the Geological Museum in Nassau Hall; and it is now leased by the Athletic Association.

In the fall of 1883 the students became dissatisfied with the condition of the grounds and made another appeal to the alumni which was very liberally answered. By June, 1885, the diamond and the track had been repaired, the small grand stand moved to the east of the field, where it stood until the winter of 1900; the club-house and fence were repaired and painted; and a small set of "bleachers" erected, costing in all about $300. In May, 1886, the Graduate Advisory Committee decided to build a house on the field for the accommodation of the players, and the following committee on superintendence was appointed: H. F. Osborn, '77, A. H. Larkin, '87, and W. J. Cook, '89. By the following year the alumni had contributed $400, which was spent in enlarging the existing club-house and fitting it with shower-baths, new lockers, and water-fixtures. The house was plentifully supplied with water from the town system, through the generosity of F. S. Thompson, '88, who gave $265 to make the necessary connections. The next year Mr. Thompson made another contribution to the grounds of $1,100, which was expended on the ornamental entrance gateway designed by J. B. Lord, '79.

In the fall of 1887 the captain of the baseball nine stated at a mass meeting that it was absolutely necessary for the team to have a "cage" in which to practise during the winter months. Formerly the men had got a little training in the bowling-alleys of the Gymnasium, but this was very unsatisfactory. Several years earlier, and in fact in 1879 also, there had been some talk of bringing the old boat-house up from the canal and attaching it to the back of the Gymnasium for a cage. At this time, however, this plan was not considered for some unknown reason, and the committee began to solicit subscriptions for a new building to be placed near the club-house. The New York alumni contributed half the money, and in February, 1888, the first wooden cage was completed at a cost of $2,400. It was one hundred and forty feet long, fifty feet wide, and twenty feet high, with twenty-four large windows in the roof. The ceiling was of wire netting, and from each wall a cord netting could be pulled out eight feet, to furnish several narrow alleys for battery practice. When the baseball team was not practising, the track candidates would train on the narrow sawdust track that edged the floor. This building, however, was ill-fated, for in June, 1888, even before it was completely paid for, a violent wind-storm swept over the town, completely demolished the cage, and injured the club-house. This latter was immediately repaired by the alumni, but no one felt like rebuilding the cage until the team began to complain again of the poor accommodations of the Gymnasium. It was then decided to build a permanent, stable structure of iron and brick; and after the long delay of gathering subscriptions, criticising plans, etc., the present cage was completed in the winter of 1889-90 at an expenditure of over $8,000. This was subscribed by the Football and Baseball Associations and the Glee Club; also by generous subscriptions from Hon. Hugh McMillan, of Detroit, and from other alumni and the undergraduates. In the summer of 1889 the field was enlarged by filling in the east and west sides; and the following spring, the present field was completed under the superintendence of J. R. Barr, '89, according to the plans of H. F. Osborn, '77, and the Graduate Advisory Committee. The field was re-fenced and re-graded, new bleachers were erected, and a new one-third mile track constructed. The new diamond was laid out to run northeast and southwest, with the home-plate in front of the large covered grand stand which had been erected by Mr. and Mrs. John J. McCook of New York. The class of '90 completed this by placing the clock in the cupola.

The next year the newly incorporated University Athletic Association purchased the adjoining lot on Prospect Avenue, thus securing space for an additional field and an attractive permanent frontage. The Association still lacked one thing to complete its equipment—a club-house for the players, where they might live during the height of the season, meet without interruption for conferences, and, above all, where they might receive the proper nourishing food at the training-table. This came at Commencement in 1891, when H. F. Osborn, '77, resigned from the Graduate Advisory Committee after three years of energetic membership. He presented the Association with the Osborn Field House, which was completed one year later, according to the plans of Mr. Thomas Oliphant Speir, '87. The building is fifty feet broad, thirty-two feet deep, with a basement, a full first story and a former second story, and is constructed of Trenton pressed brick trimmed with brown stone. The entrance on Olden Street is flanked by four wooden pillars springing from a cut-stone porch and supporting a large dormer upon the front of which is placed a shield of terra-cotta with the inscription "1891, University Athletic Club." Passing through the large oaken door, the visitor enters the reception-hall, better known as the Trophy Room, for the walls are covered with championship banners and pennants, and on the left are racks filled with the baseballs and footballs used in championship games; those won from Harvard are painted crimson, and those from Yale blue, with the score in gilt letters. Right in front of the doorway is a large fireplace of mottled brick, and from the mantel above, the motto stands out in terra-cotta letters: "Oranje Boven."

Broad double doors lead from this room to the large dining-rooms on both sides; that on the left is used by the scrub or the visitors, but it is equipped in exactly the same way as the 'Varsity room on the right, except that the latter has a fireplace with the tablet and inscription: "1891. Presented to Princeton University by Henry F. Osborn, Class of '77." The floors are waxed, hard Virginia pine, the walls of stippled rock plaster, with the doors and windows of poplar stained like old oak, and ceilings of Georgia pine. The visitor, however, forgets the walls, for all his attention is riveted on the photographs of former athletic teams that line the walls. And yet the list of these, like that of the trophies, is sadly incomplete. If the visitor returns to the Trophy Room and takes the winding stairway on the right of the fireplace, he will reach the committee-rooms on the second floor, the bath-rooms and the two bedrooms for the trainers, coaches, and sometimes for the players. But this floor is not so interesting as the basement, where the furnace and storage bins are crowded together to make room for the kitchens.

In 1896 that part of the field lying on Prospect Avenue was graded into a new football and baseball field for the use of the Freshmen and Scrub teams. The long-desired 200-yard straightaway track was added through the kindness of Robert Garrett, '97, who, the next year, built a quarter-mile bicycle track in the field below the old tennis-courts; for the bicycle team had found it impossible to train on the running-track at the University Field, which could not be properly graded for fast riding. One other change has been made since then, and that was the erection, in the fall of 1900, of the permanent grand stands for the Yale football game.

But the use of these buildings and grounds is necessarily limited to the small number of students who had confidence enough in their skill to try for a 'Varsity team. Until the spring of 1896 there was really no place set aside for these ultra-amateurish games; no definite place equipped for those students who played for fun and exercise, without any hope of increasing the glory of athletic Princeton, but merely of preserving their own health and good spirits.

Early in the 'nineties some desultory attempts had been made to provide such a playground, but no definite action was taken until the summer of 1891, just after the drowning of Frederick Brokaw, '92. Some of his friends met in the offices of J. W. Alexander, '60, and proposed to open such a field as a memorial to him. For some reason the work of the committee that was appointed, was allowed to drag. Early in 1894 Mr. Brokaw offered to erect a memorial building to his son if the alumni would provide the field. This gave the movement new life, and the committee was re-organized as follows:

C. W. McAlpin, '88, Chairman; J. W. Alexander, '60; C. C. Cuyler, '79; A. Moffat, '84; T. H. Harris, '86; E. A. S. Lewis, '91; G. B. Agnew, '91, Treasurer; A. R. Gulick, '89, Secretary.

In the spring of 1896 the memorial building and swimming-pool was completed at a cost of $45,000; and some time later the large terraced field was ready for use after an expenditure of $10,000. And well have they fulfilled their purpose!

All the students, irrespective of class, use the Memorial for bathing and swimming, and enjoy the large field, where on a bright day in the spring the visitor may find almost two hundred boys in their gay, preposterous clothing, scattered over the field, some kicking football, others playing baseball, and a few trying golf-clubs. On the broad terrace between the Memorial building and the field are a dozen tennis-courts, which were put in excellent condition in 1898, through the kindness of J. W. Alexander, '60, and are now under the control of the Tennis Association.

Most of the student golfers belong to the club of graduates and undergraduates. Formerly the golf course was to the northwest of Princeton, out at the end of Bayard Lane; but very recently the farm lying southeast of the water-tower and extending to Canal Street on the east and from the Theological Seminary to Stony Brook, covering two hundred and forty acres, has been bought, which gives Princeton, in a few years, the largest and finest college golf course in America. The Class of '86 expect to erect a club-house on the grounds, as their class memorial.

Such is the equipment which Princeton possesses in the spring of 1901, and at present the chief lack is of an adequate gymnasium. But it is hoped that before the year closes the ground will be broken for the new gymnasium for which subscriptions are now being solicited from all the alumni, and Princeton will then be placed for athletic accommodations and accomplishments in the front rank of American colleges.

THE OSBORN FIELD HOUSE
UNIVERSITY ATHLETIC CLUB.

BASEBALL AT PRINCETON.

Handball or "fives" was the first game of ball played in Princeton, but no records of any matches were kept. In 1850, a brick wall or "alley" was built back of Edwards Hall but in seven years a new game superseded handball in student favor—it was "townball" or the old Connecticut game. In the fall of '57, a few members of the Freshmen class organized the Nassau Baseball Club to play baseball although only a few members had seen the game and fewer still had played.

But it became popular among the class, and a diamond was laid out in the "pasture" lot, by the present Casino, under the direction of the following officers: C. H. Dod, '61, President; J. Wiley, '61, Secretary; H. H. Janeway, '61, Treasurer; V. A. Lewis, '61, R. K. Noye, '61, L. S. Atwater, '61, Standing Committee.

The object of this standing committee was to remove all bricks, stones, and other obstructions on the ground, which were liable to cut the feet and impede the operations of the energetic club.

After a few weeks playing, with the audacity peculiar to Freshmen, they challenged the Sophomore class to a match game. The Sophomores were as innocent of all knowledge regarding the game as new born babes, but they were not to be downed by a lot of Freshmen. One faction favored the contest, but the other, inwardly fearing it would go hard with them, declared it was beyond the dignity of their class to submit to such impertinence. However, after much consideration, the challenge was accepted and the Presidents of the two clubs were chosen as umpires. A referee was also elected, whose duty it was to decide between the umpires, whenever they should disagree. Each side consisted of fifteen players, and the whole game was conducted with laudable sport and good feeling.

After each party had played five innings, the Sophomores had beaten their antagonists by twenty-one rounds, and were declared victorious. The announcement was received by the Sophs. with deafening hurrahs. The Freshmen, throwing their caps into the air and showing other indications of a spirit unbroken by defeat, replied by giving them three lusty cheers for their immortal class.

In the following spring of '58, baseball clubs of all descriptions were organized on the back campus and "happiness on such occasions seemed to rule the hour." But in the fall of '58, baseball proper began at Princeton, when some Freshmen entered college from Brooklyn, the home of baseball. They had brought their bats, balls, and suits with them and played every Saturday during the fall. By spring, it was felt wise for the players to join in a club and on March 14, 1859, the following men from the Freshman class met and formed the "Baseball Club of the Class of 1862, Nassau Hall": L. W. Mudge, J. L. Munn, H. S. Butler, A. Marks, Jr., W. H. Bayles, E. P. Brewster, J. J. Coale, J. O. Green, A. P. Morse, H. H. Robinson, H. L. Sampson, W. D. Mershon, C. W. Petrie, W. W. Knox, E. B. Freeman, Jr., W. Butler, W. Baldwin, E. S. Atwater, C. Young, R. H. Van Pelt, D. W. Guy, H. R. Freeland, E. R. Burkhalter, C. W. Remington, C. W. Nassau. They organized their club very carefully and adopted a rather quaint, though formal Constitution and By-Laws, which gave the captain absolute direction of the game. The expenses of the club were slight, amounting in the first year to $9.43 for bats, balls, etc., and they were defrayed by the initiation dues of fifty cents, and the monthly dues of ten cents. A small revenue was received from fines; for members who used "profane or impious language while assembled for field exercise" were fined ten cents; those who disputed the decisions of the umpire or refused obedience to the captain in the exercise of lawful authority, were fined five cents; any person who audibly expressed his opinion on a doubtful play before the decision of the umpire is given, was fined three cents.

The first election resulted in the following officers:

L. W. Mudge, '62, President; J. L. Munn, '62, Vice-President; A. Marks, Jr., '62, Treasurer; H. S. Butler, '62, Secretary; L. W. Mudge, '62, Captain of the First Nine; J. Green, '62, Captain of the Second Nine.

THE FIRST NINE.

L. W. Mudge, '62, c.; J. L. Munn, '62, p.; H. L. Sampson, '62, 1st.; H. H. Robinson, '62, 2nd.; H. S. Butler, '62, 3rd.; E. P. Brewster, '62, ss.; W. Baldwin, '62, lf.; J. J. Coale, '62, rf.; C. W. Remington, '62, cf.

Although only members of the class of '62 were eligible to active membership, a large number of upper classmen were elected Honorary Members, with all the privileges of the game and field. In this way the best players of the college were gathered into this club which, in 1860, became known under the old title of Nassau Baseball Club.

Daily matches were played at the noon hour and on Saturday afternoons in the field back of Edwards. Their game was very much like the present one, except that the ball was made of both leather and rubber. It was "live" in other words, it could be knocked a great distance and would bounce lightly. This accounts for the large scores and for the rule that a catch on the first bounce, as well as on the fly, was out. This last rule was, however, soon dropped, for in most places the ground was so rough that the ball seldom bounced true, and the men who waited for a bounce usually missed. The manner of pitching was slightly different also; all the throwing and pitching was underhanded. This rule was neglected, however, until the spring of '68, when it was so strictly enforced that E. Davis '70, was forced to give up pitching curves; and it was not finally abandoned until the late seventies.

In the fall of '59, the game was taken up by the Seminary students and match games were played every two weeks, in which the Nassaus were usually the victor. One year later the First Nine of the Nassau Club was invited by Dr. E. D. Pierson '54, of Orange, to come to Orange and play a team of amateurs. This of course marked an important development in the sport, and it was only after much persuasion that the Faculty consented and on October 22, 1860, the nine went to Orange to play the first game of baseball in which representatives of Princeton played a team outside of Princeton itself.

Umpire—Tom Morris, of the Star Club.
Nassau, 42; Orange, 42.

In the first part, Nassau was far ahead but by the close of the ninth inning Orange had tied the score, and the game had to be called on account of darkness, with the score 42—42. The Nassaus excelled in fielding but with the "live" ball, the ground to be covered was larger. The field was very rough and towards the end of the game the Princeton men became exhausted, while the superior strength of the older men of Orange, enabled them to continue strong playing.

In the fall of '60, Captain Mudge wrote to Yale, Columbia and Rutgers, challenging them to a match game but they replied that they had no teams, and were still playing the old Connecticut game. For two years the records are silent, though games were played every two or three weeks with the Seminary, in one of which on April 19, '62, the Nassaus won by the score of 45—13.

1862-63.

NASSAU BASEBALL CLUB.

H. C. Milspaugh, '64, Captain.

In the fall of '62, the Nassaus became the champions of New Jersey by twice defeating the former champions, the Stars, of New Brunswick. The first game was played on Sept. 24, 1862, at Princeton, and resulted in the score 22-16, in favor of Nassaus. The return game was played on Oct. 11, at New Brunswick and was a great affair in the history of the college, for the 'revered President—that patron of sports', had given the students permission to accompany the team. The Nassaus went to the bat first. "Their pitcher seized the ball and swinging his hand behind him as if in an effort to dislocate his shoulder, put his head between his legs—almost—and running furiously, discharged the ball some yards away from the home base. After repeating this action an indefinite number of times, our worthy captain, who was batting, at last got a ball that suited him and set a good example by a fine hit." Before the side was retired, five runs were scored, but the Stars immediately tied the score. In the second inning, a home run was knocked when the bases were filled and four runs came in at one time. This was the biggest inning for the Nassaus, for they scored thirteen runs. The play, however, was so slow that the game had to be stopped on account of darkness in the sixth inning, with the score 26-15 in favor of Nassau. The games of this period, in fact of all the sixties were more of a social event in the player's life than those of to-day. They were always followed by a jolly supper, with plenty of fare and speeches, for though the opponents were not college men, they were amateurs.

Only a few games were played with outside teams in the spring of '63. The first game was at Philadelphia, against the Athletics, who defeated the Nassaus.

On September 26, the first game was played, when the Athletics came to Princeton, and were defeated by the score of 29—13. As no Princeton records of this game have been preserved, the following account is quoted from a Philadelphia paper:

"No one but a topographical engineer could describe that ground. To get to 1st base you ran up a hill, ran down to 2nd base, up to 3rd base and home base. The right field played at the top of a hill, the centre field at the bottom and the left field in a gully. To the Nassau players, who had been accustomed to and had overcome the difficulties of fielding on such a ground, the irregularities were of no account, but the effect was terrible on the Philadelphians, while the weakening feeling of playing on empty stomachs also told heavily against them.

"The Athletics, however, always play a good uphill game, (and this was decidedly up hill and down hill too) and they went at it. Malone pitched in the 1st, 2nd, and 9th innings, McBride pitched the balance of the game; the fielding of the Athletics being marked by a fine fly catch by Malone at short field—a beauty by Collum at right field, fine ones by Smith and Berkenstock, crowned by a magnificent one by Gratz at centre field, and which he elegantly threw to 1st base, putting a man out, thereby making the only double play of the day. The star play of the game was when Malone was put out at the home plate. The ball had been batted to deep left field; Malone started from second, and as he passed third base, Wickham turned away from the home plate as though it was useless to try to prevent the run. This induced Malone to moderate to a jog-trot. Milsbaugh threw the ball to the home plate, but Wickham made no effort to catch it until it was almost there. Then, by a sudden jump, he caught the ball, and put out Malone, who was the most surprised man imaginable. The best score was by Mr. Smith, who played 2nd base admirably. The gallant catcher of the Athletics was badly hurt on the face and left eye in the early part of the game by a foul ball, but he pluckily kept his position.

"From first to last, the Nassaus played with the steadiness, judgment, and skill of masters of the game. Knowing the ground well, they ran their bases with boldness and success. Their pitcher helped them greatly. He gives a slow ball with a heavy twist and is extremely irregular. The Athletics found it difficult to bat him for two or three innings. The game afforded a superior exhibition of nerve and skill on the part of the Nassaus, and of wretched muffing and feeble batting on the part of the Athletics. No doubt their empty stomachs rebelled against hard work. After play, the Nassaus conducted their guests to the Mansion House and gave them a hearty and most welcome supper. Here the ball was presented by Col. Fitzgerald, and received by L. B. Halsey, '64; and the occasion was marked by an interchange of many delicate courtesies; after which the Athletics tore themselves away from their gentlemanly and highly esteemed competitors."

Nassau vs. Irvington.

at Princeton, September 27, 1863.

Princeton 31; Irvington 7.

On the following day, the team from Irvington, N. J., was defeated; and the Nassau club at once determined to take a tour during Quarterly Week. The members paid their own expenses, but as all the games were played in Brooklyn where a majority of the players lived, the actual outlay was not very large. Uniforms were procured of blue pants, and simple white shirts, without any insignia, save a badge of thin white ribbon with the word NASSAU printed on it.

The following accounts are taken from the New York Clipper :

"The first game of the series, against the Excelsiors resulted in a well earned victory for the collegians, by a score of 13-9. Only seven innings were played on account of darkness. A heavy shower of rain in the morning and one in the afternoon, that necessitated a suspension of play in the second inning, placed the ground in a very unfavorable condition, especially where not covered with turf. The bases and catcher's and pitcher's positions were very slippery, so much so as to make fielding in these positions almost an impossibility. The ball also became wet and could not be either batted or caught well. In spite of these draw-backs, however, some very good play was shown on both sides, especially on fly catching as the score shows. In batting, Milspaugh took the lead, besides making the best catch in the game; Wickham being second best on the list; Weeden and Rogers doing the best on the Resolute side. Mr. Grum acted as umpire with his usual impartiality, and the game was played in the most friendly and gentlemanly manner throughout."

"The second match played on the Excelsior grounds, proved to be one of the best played and contested games of the season, and was exceedingly creditable to the skill of the young collegians, both in batting and fielding. Up to the 9th innings of the game, the totals were but 10-5, the Excelsiors having the lead, but in the last innings the Nassaus, by some excellent batting, and aided by some very poor fielding on the part of their opponents, scored no less than seven runs to the Excelsiors one, winning the game by one run. Of those who distinguished themselves in fielding on the part of the Nassaus were: Halsey, McIlvaine, Condit and Wickham, in their respective positions, and Henry as pitcher, also Little in the same position. In batting Milspaugh took the lead, as in the first game, Henry being a good second and Wickham third. On the Excelsior side in fielding, Whiting at first base was the most successful; the pitching and catching of the two Brainards being first class throughout. Cook and Chappell in the field and Jerome and Flanley at short stop and 2nd base, also played well and in fact until 'refreshments' were served up, the play was good on both sides, but afterwards there was some very loose play indeed. In batting H. Brainard, Jerome and Chappell were the most successful, the latter making the best hit of the match. Mr. Pearce impartially and satisfactorily discharged the duties of umpire and he had several close points to decide."

"On Wednesday another victory was added to the list of games won by the Nassaus during their visit to the metropolis, they defeating the Stars on their own grounds that day, by a score of 16-7 in a game of nine innings. The Stars were minus the services of four first class players or perhaps the game would have been more closely contested. They played well, however, with the nine they had, especially in the last four innings, when they scored three runs to their opponents' two, the latter part of the game being exceedingly well contested. In the first five innings, the Nassaus scored fourteen to their opponents four, their batting and fielding being first class, but in the latter part of the contest they fell off their batting somewhat.

"It is scarcely necessary to make any exceptions in favor of this or that player where all did so well on both sides, but on the part of the Stars, McCullough's fine fielding and the fly catching of Flanders were worthy of special notice, as was the play of Halsey and Condit of the Nassaus. In batting, Morris and Manley were the most successful on the Star side, McIlvaine taking the lead in run getting on the Nassau side, although Milspaugh batted the best; Halsey also scored well, and Condit marked his batting with a clean home run. The Nassaus did not adopt the 'waiting game' style of play in this match as they did in the Excelsior game. We would suggest to them to repudiate it altogether, leaving such a style of play to those clubs, who prefer 'playing the points' as it is called instead of doing 'the fair and square thing' with their opponents. Mr. Chapman ably acted as umpire, and a handsome supper appropriately terminated the day's proceedings."

Thus far the team had been successful. But they had made the mistake of placing the hardest game of the series the last on the schedule, and after three days of exciting play, they were not in trim to meet the champions of the United States.

"The contest was a very good one throughout but the Nassaus did not field up to their mark in the previous matches, although they played finely in a majority of innings, their catching and throwing being excellent. Henry's pitching bothered the Atlantics exceedingly, every man of their nine having strikes called on him in the course of the game. Smith and Crane both went out on strikes. The fact is, the Atlantics have this season had no club trouble them so much to defeat, except the Eckfords, as did the collegians. The attendance of spectators was quite numerous, although very little publicity was given to the match. The Atlantics had all of their nine out except Start and Sprague, the latter not having been a member of the club long enough to play. The Nassaus went to the bat first, scoring one run to the Atlantics four. By the close of the third inning, their score stood four to the Atlantics five, the latter drawing a blank in their third inning through the fine fielding of Henry and Condit in catching foul balls. In the fourth inning the Nassaus scored four runs, thereby taking a decided lead by a score of 9-5, which by the close of the sixth inning was increased to the totals of 13-7. In the seventh inning, however, the Nassaus brought their score up even 13-13, but in the seventh inning of the Atlantics they added five runs to their score, the totals at the close being 18-13. In the fifth inning Rankin made a beautiful double play from a splendid fly catch, on which he put out Chapman and Price, a round of applause greeting the skilful performance. In fact, the general play of the Nassaus was excellent throughout, their errors mainly resulting from the rough character of the ground. This match closed the series played by the Nassaus. They have done what no other club has done that has ever visited the Metropolis before, viz: won three out of four games with Brooklyn Clubs." These games aroused little interest however, outside of baseball players. Strange as it may seem, the majority of the students preferred to write an essay for the Lit. than to knock flies on the diamond. The intense, and yet, general interest in athletics, which characterizes Princeton to-day, did not begin until Dr. James McCosh became President and gave the sports the open approval of the Faculty.

The first match of the spring season was against the Athletics of Philadelphia, who won by the score of 9-14. S. H. Jacobus, '64, was the regular centrefielder, but on account of his health, his physician and his father had forbidden him to play. In the Athletic game his place was filled by Mr. Brinkerhoff. On July 4, a brother of Captain Milsbaugh played centre field, but for the remaining three games Jacobus could not resist the temptation of joining in the success of his team, and played his regular position, for the time assuming the name of Warren, with the full consent of H. C. Warren, '64, a member of the Nassau Club who lived in Brooklyn.

After the game Mrs. John Drew very courteously invited the Nassaus and their friends to attend her theatre, and on the following evening the Athletics entertained them very handsomely at the house of their President, Colonel Fitzgerald.

The team then went to New York where they played three games. The first game on July 4, was a victory over the strong Mutual Team, of New York.

The third match resulted in a disastrous defeat by the Atlantics; for the Nassaus had again made the mistake of placing this game at the end of the series. Though this was the most important game of the trip, the charge for admission was only ten cents. The leading sporting paper of New York contains the following account:

"If the young collegians from Princeton, who are enjoying their vacations by playing a series of games of baseball with the prominent clubs of the metropolis and the vicinity, had been at all puffed up by their previous successes against the Mutual and Star Clubs of New York and Brooklyn, as it was natural to expect they would be, 'they had the consate taken out of them entirely,' as Pat would say, yesterday, for assuredly they ran their heads against a very hard wall when they encountered the Atlantics, in the splendid trim for play in which they were, in the match at Bedford yesterday afternoon.

"We have seen the Atlantic Club play from the time they occupied a field adjoining the Long Island Cricket Grounds, when our worthy friend Caleb Sniffen was one of 'the nine,' up to yesterday, and certainly we never before saw them present such a fine team in a match, or play such a splendid fielding and batting game as they did yesterday. Such batting we never saw before, not even excepting that they displayed in the Mutual match, in 1862, at Bedford, and we never saw them play a finer fielding game than that of yesterday. In fact it was about as perfect a display of the beauties of the game as the bound rule will admit of, and it is really provoking to see such a nine as the Atlantics now possess, so partial to a style of play that is altogether unworthy of the high mark they are capable of, and should aim for.

"A better disposition of their nine than that of yesterday, could not be made, nor could they have well displaced any member of it without weakening it, certainly not as far as the in-field is concerned; and the realization of this fact was what helped them to play so creditably as they did. It was unfortunate for the Nassaus, in this instance, that they had previously defeated the Mutuals, for otherwise the Atlantics would probably have 'let up' on them somewhat; as it was, however, no mercy was shown them, because under the circumstances, the Atlantics, by defeating their opponent, lashed the Mutuals over the backs of the Nassaus, for it was sort of double victory to beat the club that had beaten the Mutuals. This it was, no doubt, that gave such 'vim' to the play of the Atlantics, and caused them to make the effort they did, to show all that they could do when they were in proper trim for action, as they certainly were on this noteworthy occasion.

"The game yesterday was opened by the Atlantics with a score of six runs, with two men left on their bases, and this was followed up with scores of thirteen and eight respectively in the two succeeding innings, the aggregate in the three innings being twenty-seven, an average of over eighty for a match. And to offset this they only allowed their opponents to score one run each inning, although the batting of the Nassaus was such as to merit ten runs at least. The fielding of the Atlantics was, however, too good for anything in the batting line that was at all inferior to their own display at the bat, each player of the nine doing his duty in the field thoroughly and efficiently throughout, the errors in this respect showing a smaller average than we have ever before recorded in a game.

"This result somewhat 'demoralized' the Nassaus, but they soon rallied and went to work to obtain a good 'show' in the game, even if victory was out of their reach, and by very creditable fielding, especially considering the odds against them, they prevented their opponents from adding more than fifteen runs to their score in the last six innings, the totals at the close being 42-7, the Nassaus scoring blanks in five out of the nine innings played, and the Atlantics three. Of the play on the occasion we have nothing to say that is not in praise of the majority of the two nines throughout the match. On the Atlantic side Pearce marked his fine catching with a splendidly taken fly tip in Leggett's best style; Smith marked his with a beautiful stop from a very swift ball, and Galvin proved that he was just the man for the position he occupied by his effective stopping of swiftly batted balls and accurate throwing to first base; Crane played at second base as though he had got 'home again' and was in a familiar position; Pratt, too, maintained his reputation as one of the best pitchers, if not the best, in the whole baseball community; the veteran of the nine, too played up to the high mark he has previously reached this season, and Chapman and Sidney Smith proved by their play that they were the right men in the right places.

"On the Nassau side one and all did their duty most creditably, their fielding being decidedly the best the Atlantics have played against this season; their batting, too, was such as would have led to a good score against any other nine they could play with. Milspaugh, Halsey and Crocheron especially distinguished themselves by the fine catches they made, and, by the way, in reference to the find bound catches that were made in the match, we have to say that the most creditable bound catches in the outer field were made on foul balls, and those taken in the in-field were such that, as fine stops, would have insured the batsman being put out on bases. In fact the argument against the fly game, that it throws aside fine bound catches falls to the ground when it is considered—and the season's experience will prove the fact—that the majority of finely taken bound catches are included in the above category, the fly game in fact only ruling out such bound catches, as all first class players scorn to take now.

"The good ruling of the umpire was a noteworthy feature of the game, and the hospitable reception of the Nassaus after the close of the play was a fitting termination to the best and most creditable game of ball the Atlantics ever played."

The last game of the year was played at Newark, after which the team disbanded for the long vacation. After an interesting game, the Eurekas won by the score of 12-24.

An "old grad" writes of this team: "That was a great nine and considering the smallness of the College, an extraordinary one. I have seen all the Princeton catchers since then but Wickham is still my ideal.

"I don't believe that swift pitching makes the judgment uncertain concerning the merit of old time catchers. It took more nerve and quickness to stand up behind the bat with no protection but the hands, than it does to receive swifter balls from behind movable ramparts and think how great a thrower a man must be to cut off a runner from first to second in the days of slow delivery."

E. P. Rankin, '65, Captain.

In the fall of '64 an exciting series of class baseball games was played but the season is chiefly noted for the first college game that the representatives of Princeton ever played. On Tuesday, November 22, the team from Williams College was defeated by the Nassaus, 27-16.

The Lit. says:

"It was a day anxiously anticipated. For several days previous considerable rain had fallen, which rendered the ground very damp and unpleasant and excited fears that the game would not come off. But finally Tuesday came, and the sun rose bright and clear, when, of course, high hopes were raised of a pleasant day. But soon the clouds began to marshal their hosts to dispute the further descent of old Sol's cheerful rays, and kept up their battle all day, giving us sunshine and shade alternately. The Williams Club arrived in the nine o'clock train, and by half-past twelve the ball ground was literally crowded with the passionate lovers of manly sports, and neither cold feet nor the prospect of having an opportunity to recite in Greek or Rhetoric, served to lessen the numbers. All seemed determined to see the game through. At 12.30, the players' appearance on the ground was greeted with cheers. The Williams boys presented a fine appearance, all being about medium sized, heavy set, and with well developed muscles. Their bright uniforms presented quite a contrast to the Nassaus, who were younger looking, of all sizes, and had no uniforms. This fact added to the bitterness of the defeat for the well-uniformed Williams men felt disgusted because they were beaten by a crowd of 'countries' in shirt sleeves. The game was spirited and highly interesting, being well played on both sides. By the end of the third inning, however, it was evident which way the tide was running, the score standing 14-1 in favor of the Nassaus. The Nassaus maintained their ancient reputation, winning the game by eleven runs, and adding another to the many laurels they have so nobly won.

"At half past three the game closed with three hearty cheers by the respective clubs for each other and the umpire, when they adjourned to meet in Mercer Hall for supper at five o'clock. At the time appointed the players and about seventy-five of the students assembled at Mercer Hall, to partake of the bountiful refreshments which had been tastily prepared by the energetic committee, who evinced a very thorough knowledge of the culinary department.

"A large banner, with the inscription "WELCOME WILLIAMS," was suspended at the head of the Hall.

“Ended off with cigars, smoke and singing.

“Speeches were made by Messrs. Morris, Mudge and Rankin, and hopes expressed that the Nassaus would visit New England next summer and play the return game.

“Next songs, patriotic, classic and local, were sung. Princeton singing songs of Nassau, and Williams the songs of their Alma Mater.

“If the Williams boys were beaten playing baseball, we unhesitatingly award them the palm in singing. They sang splendidly, both comic and sentimental, and left the impression on all that they were a jolly, pleasant, and gentlemanly set of fellows.

“When the party dispersed, it was the general observation that it was one of the most pleasant days of the session, and it is hoped that the good feeling between Nassau and Williams may ever continue.”

In the spring the nine began to practise and on June 30, they were defeated by the Williams College team at Williamstown. The game should never have been played, for at the last moment the regular pitcher, J. B. McPherson, '66, could not go and the Nassaus played with eight men only, three of whom were not members of the first, but of the second and even the third teams.

Fly Catches Made, Nassau 9, Williams 11. Fly Catches Missed, Nassau 4, Williams 2. Put Out on Foul Balls, Nassau 3, Williams 2. Passed Balls, Wickham 11, Little 4, Woodward 3. Game Called at 1.48 P. M. Time of Game, 3 hours and 12 minutes. Umpire, Mr. A. M. Bush, Knickerbocker Club. Scorers, Messrs. Edward Riggs and T. W. Davis.

An eye witness of the game wrote the following account:

“Yesterday was a gala day at Williams. The much talked of baseball match with the Nassau Club of Princeton was played, and resulted in a brilliant victory for Williams. Baseball is the great game here. Unable to compete with Yale or Harvard in boating from the want of an appropriate sheet of water on which to dip the oar, and prohibited from that ancient yet barbarous game of football, the students of Williams College have lately turned their attention wholly to baseball and with what success let their record show. Four years ago there was no organized club in the institution which played the New York game. To-day they are victors over the best college clubs in the land.

“The game of yesterday was one of the best and most exciting ever witnessed by your correspondent; and certainly the best ever played on these grounds.

“The Nassaus arrived in the morning train, and were received by a committee of the Williams Club and escorted to the Mansion House, where entertainment had been reserved for the visitors. The day was very warm but slightly cloudy, and the breeze which sprang up at the opening of the game was welcomed by both players and spectators.

“The latter had begun to assemble long before the appointed time, and soon not less than five hundred persons were seated on a nicely shaded hill to the east of the field, whence an excellent view was afforded. Among the audience were large numbers of ladies, who lent their grace and beauty to the occasion, and thereby we doubt not, stimulated the players to more skillful and heroic efforts.

“At 1.30 o'clock the clubs appeared upon the field. The Nassaus wore a uniform of white, which set off their fine forms to the very best advantage. They were even in size, slim, wary and muscular, and presented as fine an appearance as any body of players we have ever seen. They were slightly heavier than the Williams men. The Williams men were uniformed in blue pants, with white shirts and caps. They were not so tall, but more thickly built than their opponents; and, though their appearance was not so unique as the Nassaus, they still looked as if they could do good service with bat and ball.

“At 1.48 the game was called and the Nassaus took the bat. They succeeded in making three tallies. Tracy made a fine catch in centre field, and Delano and Meacham did some sharp playing on their respective bases. Williams then took their turn at the bat and were put out with one tally, Condit and Rankin having shown themselves master of the situation, and turned the tables on Williams. On the second innings the Nassaus received a blind, and Williams added one more tally to their score. The third innings were finely played by the Nassaus who made ten tallies, Delano having had bad luck on the first base, and muffed one ball sadly. Williams made seven tallies on their innings, which was closed by Rankin putting out Whitman on the second base in the most approved style. On the fourth innings Nassau added two tallies, and Williams four tallies. Martin made a fine catch in the right field. On the fifth innings Nassau drew another blank, while Williams made two tallies. The interest in the game now became intense for a short time, until it was evident that Williams were gaining slowly, steadily towards victory. On the sixth, seventh and eighth innings Nassau received blunders, while Williams added largely to their score. On the sixth, Day played his base splendidly putting out Rankin and Crocheron, Rankin played his second well, but Forsyth and Crocheron muffed badly. On the seventh, Martin and Tracy did fine work in the field, while on the eighth, Jerome missed a ball, and Forsyth and Crocheron caught finely. On the last innings Nassau made one tally, while Williams received its first blind. Day played his base well, while Jerome caught two balls splendidly. So closed the game with victory for Williams.

“The pitching on the side of the Nassaus was bad, which accounts in some measure for the length of the game. We understand that their regular pitcher was unable to be present. The Nassaus played with only eight men; but justice compels us to say that they lost nothing by the absence of a player in the right field, since only two balls were knocked in that direction, one of which was caught. The Nassaus bat very finely, and play their bases well, but they seem to be deficient in the field. On the other hand, nothing could be finer than the fielding of the Williams Club. It is equal to that of any club in the United States. We noticed no point on which it is possible to criticise the playing of the Williams Club. Their batting, especially during the last five innings, was equal to that of Princeton, their bases were finely played, while their fielding was most magnificent.

"At 6 o'clock in the evening, the clubs sat down to an excellent supper, which had been prepared at the Mansion House, at the expense of the victors. Many others were present. After good service had been done to the delicate viands with which the tables were loaded, the company listened to some very fine music from the Glee Club, and to appropriate remarks from Messrs. Wickham and Sampson, of the Nassaus, and to Messrs. Martin, Thomas and Taylor, on behalf of Williams, and adjourned at 10.30 o'clock, singing

"'Tis a way we have at old Williams.'"

The team then returned to New York where they won three games from the Mutuels, Athletics and Eurekas and again were defeated by the Atlantics. The papers of the time were so filled with news of the war that no record of these games has been preserved.

The first game was against Rutgers and resulted in the severe defeat of the visitors by the score of 40-2. Rutgers was at a disadvantage playing on the strange and rough ground and with only eight men. After the supper at the Mansion House, Rutgers challenged the Nassaus to a return game on the following Saturday, but the challenge was not accepted because of the approaching Greek examinations.

Baseball became more and more popular, and games of all descriptions were played in the fall of 1866. The classes had formed teams and not the least interesting match was that between Whig and Clio Halls. It is rather shocking to learn that the students were in the habit of betting on these games, and a sober eye-witness certifies that several hundred dollars changed hands on the Hall game alone. Another amusing game was a muffing match between the classes of '67 and '68. But the Nassaus were practising regularly and played several games with the Princetons. The following is the score of one of these games:

A few days later the team desired to go to Bordentown to play the Columbias, but the Faculty refused them permission to leave, and the game was supposed to be dropped. However some of the best players in college quietly organized the Pickwick Nine and under assumed names went to Burlington. The records of the contests of the Nassau Club for this year are so meagre that this score will be printed, because, with one or two exceptions, the team was the same as the Nassaus.

In the spring of 1867, the Nassau Club was overshadowed by the wealthier club, called the Princeton Club, that had been formed in the town by several alumni and tutors. Some of the best players among the undergraduates also played regularly on this team. Although the Princetons played many practice games with the Nassaus, yet the division of forces was unfortunate. With their better financial backing, the Princetons were enabled to acquire better grounds and to bring more clubs to Princeton. From this time until the early 'seventies the few records of games at Princeton are of the Princeton Club games, which of course are not within the scope of this book. The chief interest in the college was centered in the class games, in which '69 was victorious. As soon as they had entered college in the fall of '65, the class of '66 had organized a team, which later was to give the Nassaus a majority of their team. The nine of '69 have the honor of being the first Princetonians to meet the representatives of Yale on an athletic field. The initiative came in a private letter to a member of the class of '69, in which the Yale man "intimated that the Yale Club of '69, would be glad to receive a challenge from us at any time during the spring session." The class historian writes: "We quickly caught at the suggestion, and but a short time had elapsed before the necessary arrangements were completed, and the time of the game settled. The Yale men expressed a desire to visit Princeton on Saturday, so that they could remain over, and be present at the Class Day of '67, which was to occur on the following Monday. This plan suited us extremely well, and we were desirous of carrying it into execution, but there proved to be some trouble in obtaining permission from the Faculty. Dr. Maclean, fearing lest so large a crowd of strangers might produce a good deal of disturbance in College, put his foot down on the matter, and refused to allow us to entertain our friends on that day. This was Thursday. On Friday following, a self-appointed committee, visited several of the professors, in order to obtain their opinion in regard to having the Yale nine visit us on the coming Saturday. They seemed disposed to favor this plan, and agreed to bring it up in the Faculty meeting. The result was that we were permitted to invite our friends to be with us on the morrow. Our worthy old Princeton, however, was heard to remark afterward, 'Ugh! if I'd had my way, these baseball players should have stayed at home.'

"But now what were we to do? Friday afternoon! New Haven 150 miles away, and the Yale boys to be here by next day! We immediately hastened to the telegraph office, and sent word to them of the state of affairs. They replied that one of their men was sick, and therefore the nine could not come; we immediately answered that we had made great preparations for them, and hoped very much that they would come—anxiously we waited for a reply—a large and eager crowd, had by this time assembled around the office steps, waiting to hear the issue of the correspondence. At last the answer came 'we will be with you to-morrow.' It was taken outside the door and read aloud to an enthusiastic crowd, and when the welcome truth was made known, a loud hurrah for Yale was heard going up from the assembled multitude.

"A number of committees were appointed, to attend the business of the day. The invitations were printed and sent to the town people, and on the afternoon of May 4, 1867, we met on our pleasant hillside, to engage in the anticipated game. It was naturally interesting from the circumstances under which it was played, but very little skillful play was exhibited on either side. The batting was altogether the strong point, hence the large score, 52-58 in our favor. The Yalensians took their defeat very good naturedly, and in reply to our rocket, gave us a specimen of their three times three. After changing our apparel, we repaired to Mercer Hall, where a game supper awaited us, served up in Anthony Simmons' best style. The wall was handsomely decorated with evergreens and flags. On the side walls, were the names of two colleges—Yale '69—Nassau '69—beautifully formed with evergreen boughs, kindly presented by some of our young lady friends. In the centre stood the table loaded with every delicacy. It looked very tempting to a lot of base ballists. Special orders had been issued by our careful President, that we should have no wine, so Anthony in order to give us something in which to drink the health of our guests, provided a weak solution of claret and water, for the occasion. This delightful mixture was dignified by the name of 'plush beverage.' There is now a great demand for it, but alas Anthony has passed away and the receipt has departed with him. The substantial being disposed of, toasts and remarks were in order. In reply to the toast, Our Visitors from Yale, Mr. Condict, the catcher of their nine, made some very happy remarks. Others followed with brief and appropriate addresses, after which our boys united in some Nassau songs, and Yale replied with some very jolly pieces, one of which, The Colonel from Constantinople, pleased us very much. We then shook hands all around, and as our visitors felt that they must return by the next train, we escorted them to the dummy. There we passed the remaining time with pleasant conversation, until the dummy engine was about to start, when cheer after cheer resounded through the building. As they started, the Yale boys took it up and responded with a rousing Hurrah! Hurrah! Hurrah! the three times three; and again we returned the compliment, and thus we fairly cheered each other "good-bye." It was one of the most delightful incidents in our college life, and will ever be fondly remembered by '69. Before leaving they had extended to us a hearty invitation to make them a visit at the close of the Session."

After commencement the Sophomore nine went to New Haven to play the return game. Their historian writes:

"We had made all our arrangements to visit Yale, at the end of the session, to play the return game of the series; and so now off we started, with bats and balls, and all other necessary articles for the contest. We were accompanied by quite an enthusiastic crowd of our classmates and fellow students, who went along to encourage us by their presence, and to cheer for Old Nassau, in case we did anything worthy of her praise.

"We started in a rainstorm, trusting to our luck to have fair weather the following day. Our trip to New Haven was a pleasant one. We made one car at least between Princeton Junction and New York resound with our merry college songs. Having reached the latter city and feeling our interest in the hotel which had been the temporary abode of our friend 'Clouder,' we immediately made tracks to the Park House, where, after waiting some time, we had our wants supplied. Scrub Taylor, who was one of the party, took his opportunity to indulge in a little friendly altercation with a colored brother, who was present, in which he added some new and decidedly unique titles to the darkey's original nom de plume, much to the disgust of the said African. Supper finished, we secured our berths on the evening boat up the Sound. All those who took that summer trip up to Yale will remember with pleasure the little steamer "Elm City." Friday morning, about six o'clock saw us in New Haven, in the midst of a heavy rainstorm; matters looked anything but promising for a game that afternoon, but we were living in hopes of a sudden change for the better. The first street car took us aboard, and landed us at New Haven Hotel, where we proceeded to our toilets, and obtained a good breakfast. Some time later the rain partially ceased, and a corps of Yalensians made their appearance, and escorted us to their rooms; after which we separated into squads, and visited the various places of interest in connection with the College, among which were the fine gymnasium, the Hall of two Literary Societies, and the Art Gallery. Andy Johnson was making a tour through New England and happened to be in the city the very day we were there. We had a near view of the President as he rode by in the procession, and later in the day heard him make an address to the students.

Flys Caught, Princeton 13, Yale 9. Flys Muffed, Princeton 5, Yale 3. Out on Bases, Princeton 12, Yale 7. Passed Balls, Princeton 5, Yale 15. Umpire, Mr. Knevals. Time, 2 hours and 20 minutes. Scorers, F. H. Mills, '69, Princeton, E. T. Waite, '69, Yale.

"After taking dinner at several clubs with our friends, we went out to the scene of the approaching conflict. Hamilton Park is a very level field, admirably suited for the site of a baseball ground. We were delighted with the opportunity of playing on such a fine field after experiencing the inconveniences of our own grounds, one part of which, our Yale friends humorously described as 'a deep morass surrounded by an elevated plain.' Luckily for us, the rain had now entirely ceased and the grass was clipped so short, that we found very little trouble in keeping the ball dry, or even 'red hot' sometimes. All things being prepared, we selected our umpire and the game began with '69 Nassau at the bat. It seemed to be almost impossible to score more than one or two runs in an inning; for the fielding on both sides was of the very first order. We would perhaps make two runs, and then our opponents would come in and tie us; so we went along with hardly a tally's difference, from the beginning to the very end of the game. The last innings was very exciting—we had been to the bat and secured two runs, putting us one tally ahead; and now came the hard rub! Yale would have to make one to tie, and two to beat; and they went to work with a will! McLane, the first striker, hit a grounder to our first baseman and retired in consequence. Condict, an unfortunate man on this occasion, made his base on a short hit—after him came the long powerful Hooker. He failed to do more than send Condict to his second base while he secured the first; the excitement was now becoming very great. Condict took an opportunity to run to his third base, while Hooker tried the second. Bill sent the ball to Ward, to head off the latter, but away it went far above the reach of the little baseman—and now there followed a scene which has rendered the name of Humes famous in the annals of '69's baseball career. Andy was waiting in the field for the ball; quick as thought he seized it, as it came bounding along the ground, and with one desperate effort sent it flying to second base—a good Providence must have guided that ball. The most skillful thrower in existence could not have made a surer aim. On it went, and lodged plump in the hands of the catcher, but alas!

for Condict—he poor fellow, had underrated the power of our right fielder, and was making his liveliest for the home plate. The ball reached there just ahead of him, and before he could turn and regain his base, he was caught in the trap between third and home. And now the excitement was intense—each one held his breath. Back and forth with unwearied diligence sped the eager Condict—after him, as if upon the wings of the wind, followed the 'red hot' ball—a single wrong may lose the game! but no—our boys do their part well, and at last 'Pope,' our good, honest, old 'Pope' literally falls upon the feet of his adversary. Alas for the Yalensian, that he was not protected by the invulnerable heel of Achilles, else might he have escaped; amidst mingled exclamations of joy and disappointment he retired panting, to his seat. But the conflict is not yet terminated. The issue of the next few moments are to add another feather to the cap of him who is already one of the heroes of the day; the tall first baseman comes to the bat. A safe hit places him upon his base and sends Hooker to third. And now the critical moment has arrived. A strong fair stroke will decide the game; every man stands firmly at his post and nervously awaits the result. The ball leaves the pitcher's hands—whiz! comes a 'daisy cutter,' right down to third base—but Schenck is waiting for it—around goes his old left arm, and the ball travels swiftly toward first base. Our boys jump upon their seats! Will Foxy get it! It's almost too high! Yes! hurrah—there it is, safe!—he sticks to it like a sick kitten, etc., (vide Park) he touches the base, and the game is ours. Words are inadequate to describe the scene that followed. I can only picture to you, how Andy laid down and kicked up his heels with delight, in eccentric manner, peculiarly his own! how Rawny struck his knees with his fists, with a 'good thunderation Bill!' how 'Pope' smiled, and Hope literally ran in, from the field! How we all rushed about like so many wild beings shaking hands and laughing, and fairly dancing with joy! and oh! what a rocket we did give them—none of your polite squibs, which come from a crowd of hungry infatuated ballists, after the two o'clock bell has rung, but a rousing old Hip! Hip! Hurrah! st—Bung—Ah! with exclamation points long enough to reach back to Jersey, and tell the good news. Oh, that was a merry day for '69, and if you want to enjoy a good hearty laugh with any of the crowd who were there, just ask them, 'How about the trip to Yale?' They treated us handsomely! We all sat down that evening to an excellent supper provided at one of the hotels and I need not say that we did full justice to the entertainment. They made speeches, and we replied, and when that was through, the Nassau Quartette, who all happened to be on our nine, sang, I love (hic) it, I (hic) love it, the (hic) laugh of a (hic) child; and then with an earnestness, which seemed to possess a special charm, coming as it did from a company of defeated, yet generous antagonists, they sang for the first time, those words which have since become such favorites with us here.

'Oh here's to Nassau Hall
For she's bully at base ball!'

"After supper was all disposed of, we smoked together and at last separated, some of us to escort Andy Johnson down to New York, the rest to take their respective journeys home. Thus ended our jolly Soph year!"

In the spring, the Nassaus played three games but won only one of the three. On May 18 they lost the Princeton game, 15-27, but one week later they defeated the same team, 42-26. On June 1, a Union team from the semi-professional clubs of Camden came to Princeton and won from the Nassaus by the close score of 20-21.

Umpire, Mr. Campson, Camden Club.

For many years Princetonians have claimed that J. M. Mann, '76, was the first pitcher to pitch curve balls; his first curves were pitched in the fall of 1874. On the other hand, the professionals claim that A. J. Cummings, of the Excelsior Club of Brooklyn, invented curve pitching in the spring of 1867. It is impossible to determine who was the actual discoverer or inventor; but there can be no doubt that Mann was not the first Princetonian to pitch curve balls, for in 1866, E. Davis of the class of '70, and in 1870,

J. W. Hageman '72, had pitched curve balls. Possibly the first curve ball pitched at Princeton was by F. P. Henry '66 in the Nassau—Athletic game of September 26, 1863. The Nassaus won by the score of 29-13. The correspondent of the New York Clipper writes: "In this match slow pitching with a great twist to the ball achieved a victory over swift pitching." If "a great twist" means a curve, this was curve pitching even though the pitcher and batter were unconscious of the character of the peculiarity. The idea of curve pitching was known as early as 1856, when Porter's Spirit of the Times speaks of the swift pitching of Mr. Stevens: "it is questionable, however, whether his style of pitching is most successful, many believing a slow ball curving near the bat, to be the most effective." Twelve years later it speaks of Mr. Martin of the Eckford Club of Brooklyn, as a pitcher who had a peculiar curve line delivery. Meantime the players at Princeton were learning how hard it was to hit curve balls, though they did not know the reason. In the fall of '66, E. Davis, '70, a Freshman, was made pitcher of the first nine of the Nassau Club, because few batters could hit his pitching effectively, for he was pitching curved balls. The reason why Davis has not received due credit before, is that he pitched for one year only; in the fall of '67, he was disqualified by the newly adopted rule requiring a straight arm delivery and gradually the stories of the wonderful Freshman pitcher fell out of college gossip.

The sports of that day formed a smaller part of the students life than those of to-day, and it is not surprising that this subject has not been discussed. All the members of the Nassau nine of '66-'67 who are yet alive, are firm in their statements that curves were first pitched in Princeton by Davis. Davis prepared for college in Princeton at the Edge Hill School where he was both captain and pitcher of the nine. Constant attendance at the Nassau games made him desirous of playing on a good nine of the six that were then organized in college. During his summer vacation he practised pitching against a brick wall in order to get control over the ball and put it just where he wanted. He noticed that when the ball struck the wall, it bounded back according to the twist of rotation of the ball. Then he endeavored to give the ball a perpendicular twist so that when the batter hit it, the ball would go straight up in the air and be caught easily by the catcher or pitcher. There was no attempt made to prevent the batter from hitting the ball, nor did Davis think then of curving the path of the ball. When he began to pitch in the Nassau matches, experience taught him that it was easier to field the hits when the ball struck the handle of the bats; and it was not long before he was pitching a regular inshoot, with a perpendicular twist. During the winter, Davis would pitch in the long hall at the west end of North College, where the students gathered to watch and to attempt to catch the balls he pitched. His work, however, was so soon forgotten that a player graduating four years later claimed that J. W. Hageman, '72, had invented curve pitching. Hageman played a scientific game in the box, and puzzled the batters by varying the speed of the ball without changing his style of delivery, so that years later, when curve pitching had been demonstrated, the men whom Hageman struck out, tried to excuse themselves by saying he pitched curves. It was simply his deceptive speed; probably he may have pitched an inshoot or an upshoot but not in match games. Later in 1874, the rules granted greater freedom to the pitcher and J. M. Mann, '76, began to develop curve pitching and made it the popular and most effective style of delivery.

But the nine was prevented from practising by the weather. On one day the men loafed "in the balmy warmth of an enervating langour of sultry summer," and on the next day they shivered in "chilling winds and wintry rains." Rain spoiled the first game with an outside team; on May 16, Columbia College sent a team to Princeton, but on account of the threatening rain, only seven Columbia men came. Consequently they were badly beaten.

The college was so well satisfied with the work of the team that they raised a subscription and sent the team on its first tour. It is interesting to note that on this tour the representatives of Princeton played both the Yale and the Harvard nines, before they met each other on a baseball diamond. Before this, Yale had played two college games, with Wesleyan and Columbia, and Harvard had played two games with Williams. But the first Yale-Harvard game was probably suggested by the tour of the Nassaus, for it did not occur until one month later, on July 25. Princetonians may well be proud of their representatives, who, in 1868, established the intercollegiate baseball contests among the leading colleges. This precedent of leadership was later strengthened, when the Football Association was founded at Princeton's request; in late years it has been well supported by the contributions which Princeton has made to the development of the science of football. The first game of this tour was played at Cambridge, with Harvard.

The game opened sharply, Harvard scoring two runs and Nassau one in the first inning, which was closed by a splendid fly catch by Sprague. In the next two innings the Nassaus took the lead, for Harvard played rather loosely in the third inning and allowed their opponents to score four runs. This lead the Nassaus held up to the eighth inning, when Harvard, who had given up all hopes of a victory, got down to solid work, and by some heavy batting scored eight runs. They added two more in the ninth inning and put out the Nassaus in one, two, three order; consequently Harvard won. After a supper with the Harvard men, the Nassaus took the evening train for Williamstown, and on the next day defeated the Williams nine who, at the time, were champions of the colleges in baseball.

The following report of this game is taken from the Williams College paper:

"The game with Princeton began at two o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, June 24. The weather was cool and pleasant and a large number of spectators were on the grounds.

"Every one seemed in considerable doubt as to the result of the game, which doubt however ceased to disturb most minds at the close of the second innings, 11-0! This went far beyond expectations. There was some feeble applause and muttered abuse against the Williams nine on the part of those who had not believed Williams invincible in the baseball line. After the second inning the Williams nine made enough runs to keep up a lively interest throughout the game. Some ingenious youth showed us how, if you would take off the first two innings, you would find that Williams kept and came out ahead; which fact we state merely by way of consolation.

"It would be a difficult matter for our nine to beat Princeton, if that first class University nine always plays as well as it did here. After the supper at the Mansion House, given by the college to the two nines, Van Ingen, Captain of our nine, presented the ball to Rankin, Captain of the Princeton nine, when there was an interchange of appropriate remarks. Songs were sung by both parties and the entertainment though brief, passed off pleasantly."

The team traveled that night to New Haven, and on the following day met Yale College for the first time. This first Princeton-Yale game resulted in a victory for Yale.

The Nassaus were exhausted with traveling at night and playing all afternoon and were completely fagged out. The large score was due to excellent batting on each side, rather than weak fielding. The Nassaus returned by evening boat to New York, gratified with their entertainment at Harvard, enthusiastic over their welcome at Williams, but disappointed at their cool reception at Yale. At Yale they had not been entertained and after the game, the Yale men had been so interested in their society elections, that the visitors were left to shift for themselves. In the fall there was some talk of a game with Yale at Princeton, and the whole college was divided on the question of their reception: "whether we should heap coals of fire on their heads by treating them well—as they did not treat us—or whether we should treat them, as students of one college should not treat those of another—as they did treat us." It is gratifying to know that gentlemanliness overcame the desire for revenge, even in anticipation.

In the fall, the interest in baseball was maintained

despite the many gloomy predictions of the spring, that the sport had run its course, etc. But after the game with the Athletics, on October 31, 1868, every one played or talked baseball. The truth was, a new era for baseball was dawning at Princeton. The new President, Dr. McCosh, had been inaugurated on October 27, 1868, and three days later he astonished the whole College by attending the Princeton-Athletics game. His presence and interest in the game lent dignity to the sport; baseball was no longer a mere pastime, but an acknowledged factor in college life. Hereafter there was a constant, steady development in all branches of athletics, which the good Doctor encouraged. One of the fundamental principles of his educational purposes was mens sana in corpore sano. His presence at this game was not an accident or the gratification of a mere whim, but it was the second step in his well formed plan for bettering the physical condition of the students—a plan begun in his inaugural speech, with a request for a Gymnasium. Everything that Princeton has accomplished in athletics can be traced to influences which arose in the genial environment of Dr. McCosh's administration. Was it not a good omen, that his first game resulted in a victory for Princeton?

During the winter the nine practised faithfully in the Gym. and in the spring they became known as the Princeton University Baseball Club for the Princeton Club of the town had disbanded in favor of the regular college nine. Their grounds and equipment were placed at the disposal of the new Princeton University nine, though for some unknown reasons only a few games were played in the spring. The first game resulted in a defeat by the Athletics, on April 24.

The weather was exceedingly pleasant on the 24, and two thousand persons assembled to see the new nine of the Athletics, and speculate on the accessions to their ranks. Rather unexpectedly the game turned out to be close and exciting, and the spectators were well repaid. The Princetons led the score up to the fourth inning, but in that inning the Athletics overtook them, and from that until the end, it was nip and tuck, the score being tied at the end of the eighth inning. On their last turn at bat the Princetons scored five runs, being assisted by wild throwing and poor fielding by the Athletics—as they had been all along, in fact—and for the first time during the game the friends of the Athletics began to think they had their hands full. But they were fully equal to the task before them and rattled off six runs, and won the game by a score of 28-27. Both teams were in a rusty condition, and the Athletics were certainly very fortunate in escaping defeat.

Time, 1 hour, 45 minutes. Umpire, Mr. A. M. Halbach, Keystone Club.

The batting of both clubs was safe but not heavy, and the smallness of the score may be attributed to the excellent and sharp fielding displayed. But one error was made by the Princetons, while the three errors on the part of the Athletics gave their opponents only one out of the four runs scored. Schaffer, Bechtel and Sensenderfer made some magnificent running fly-catches. Fisler made a pretty catch of a foul bound. Gummere made two excellent catches and Buck, Pell and Sharp fielded excellently. McBride pitched effectively but was out of luck in batting.

Ten days later the Athletics came to Princeton, and though the college nine made a little better showing, they were badly beaten.

Time, 2 hours. Umpire, Mr. C. Howell, Trenton Club.

Evidently the Athletics had an exceptionally strong nine for the College was well satisfied with the work of their men and were so confident of their ability that the nine was sent on an extended tour to the Eastern colleges. Before the trip new suits had been adopted, consisting of white shirts and knickerbockers and blue stockings, for at this time Princeton had no distinctive college color. Each player wore his class numerals on his shield and the word "Princeton" on his belt. The only record of this tour is from the pen of W. A. W. Stewart '71.

"The University nine of our Institution left Princeton at 10.55 on the morning of Wednesday the 29, inst. All seemed to be in excellent spirits, and the enthusiasm and confidence which the fellow students felt in them was manifested by three rousing cheers, terminated by the usual 'rocket.' After a few hours spent in New York, during which a visit was made to Peck & Snyder's baseball emporium, a lunch was taken, and the nine, with these accompanying them, embarked in the fine steamer Stonington, leaving the pier at precisely five o'clock. All day the sun shone very brightly and weather was intensely hot, but the long summer evening so cool and pleasant was rendered lively by many a college song, which seemed both to amuse and interest the passengers who crowded around us, as the familiar airs of 'Where oh! where are the verdant freshmen,' 'Annie Lyle' and 'The Son of a Gambolier' rose upon the evening air. We left the steamer at Stonington at seven o'clock this morning, and in an hour and a half arrived in Providence, welcomed by a shower of rain, but by no delegates from Brown University. During the morning a part of our nine met the Captain of the Brown nine. He had nothing whatever to say, except that no arrangements have been made for our reception, which information was quite (?) satisfactory and rendered his departure entirely agreeable. At noon the nine indulged in dinner, at which not a single Brown man graced (?) the board. About two o'clock our men, each acting as his guide, found their way to the ball ground. Since Pell had injured his finger, Bradford, the first substitute, was stationed at first base. Mr. Pell was chosen umpire, Mr. Goldie acted as scorer, and the game commenced at a little after three o'clock, Brown at the bat. The game can scarcely be called a lively one, though it was certainly good. During the first inning, Bradford, having stopped a ball between first and second, made a bad overthrow to Glen at first base, and Sharp, our catcher, hurt himself quite badly in attempting to catch a long foul. The accident occurred by his tripping over a rope which was hung upon stakes about a foot high, and which was intended to mark the limits of the ground."

"Mr. Hitchcock, the centre fielder, of the Browns' caught a good fly. Messrs. Earle and Fall distinguished themselves by general good playing.

"On the side of Princeton, Mr. Bradford made a splendid stop. Mr. Sharp held a quick 'tip' and the general playing of Messrs. Buck and Van Rensselaer was excellent. The batting on the part of the Browns' was good all the way through, but during the third inning it was superb. The ladies of Providence honored us with their presence to the number of forty or fifty. At the end of the game, both sides having cheered one another after their own particular fashion, the Princetonians betook themselves to the hotel, where they enjoyed a hearty supper. It is earnestly hoped that Brown University may soon send her nine to Princeton, that we may show them how old Nassau receives the representatives of a sister college."

The nine then proceeded to Boston, where they played three games but unfortunately no record has been preserved other than the mere scores.

Time, 3 hours and 56 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Chandler, Trimountain Club.

"Tuesday, July 5, came a clear but hot day, and at 8.30 A. M., we bade farewell to the United States Hotel and the city of Boston, as we started over a dusty railroad on our way to Springfield. Sharp and Gummere were nowhere to be found. With a feeling of security they had gone to bed, fearing no disorder marks for chapel-absence in the morning, and slept the sleep of youth and innocence till long after 8.30 had come and the train with the rest of the nine had departed.

Princeton vs. Mutuals,
at Springfield, July 5, 1870.

Princeton 42; Mutuals 8.

"In the afternoon we played the Mutuals, Buck playing 'catch,' instead of sleepy Sharp, and Bradford, first substitute, playing second base. Thus with only eight men, having only two in the field, we played a game, which though very uninteresting, being one sided all through, resulted in another victory for Princeton, with a score of 42-8.

"We left Springfield at half past six in the evening. The two missing ones were on the train. Arriving at New Haven we met at the station quite a number of the Yalensians and nearly all of the Harvard nine. Thus in a strange city we were not alone, for baseball had made us friends, and now we were surrounded by them. The Tontine House had the honor of our presence; in return we received every attention at the hands of the proprietors.

"On Wednesday the game between Yale and Princeton was advertised to commence at 2.30 P. M., but it so happened that the Sophomores had an examination in the afternoon, from which they would not be free till four o'clock, and since five of the nine are Sophs the game was postponed till four. When the nines arrived on the grounds everything looked bleak and gloomy enough; the audience consisting of three ladies, nine little ruffians, the gatekeeper, and a policeman. About five o'clock, the Sophs just coming on the ground, the game was commenced.

Baseball continued to be the most popular sport at Princeton but at other colleges it was yielding to football and rowing. The Princeton records, though very brief, show that the whole student body was interested in the nine, for in the spring, $500 was subscribed to send it on a tour, but many of the best players were detained and the tour was abandoned. The only games of which the records have been preserved were played in the fall. In the spring the nine was reorganized and evidently played several games for the Lit speaks of its strong and effective work.

On October 18, the Rose Hills started off like winners and scored ten runs in the first inning with the aid of a high wind and constant overthrows. Then Princeton began to play steadily and finally won by the score 22-18.

Of this game, a New York paper says:

"The noted Princeton College Club visited Newark, N. J. on Oct. 22, and there defeated the Amateurs after a hard fought and exciting contest. The collegians took what looked like a winning lead by scoring eight runs in the second inning, but the Amateurs played finely and tied the score in the fifth inning. It was nip and tuck from that point until the ninth inning when the Princetons by a fine batting rally, scored four runs and then blanked their opponents."

In the spring, Princeton won the return game from the Amateurs; and surprised the college by their new uniforms of brown tights and light shirts.

In the spring, Ernst was prevented from playing by an accident. P. W. Johnston, '72 was elected captain and upon his resignation, T. K. Bradford, '72. The directors renovated the dilapidated condition of the old ball field, at the foot of Chambers street, by grading and fixing the backstop and erecting new and permanent seats for the spectators. Challenges were sent to Yale, Harvard, Amherst and Brown, but these nines could not come to Princeton and for some reason the proposed tour after commencement was abandoned. Consequently very few games were played.

Princeton vs. Dolly Vardens,

at Princeton, May 18, 1872.

Princeton 49; Dolly Vardens 7.

The first match of the University nine was played with the Dolly Vardens. Contrary to the general expectation, Princeton took the lead from the start, and partly by their own excellent playing and partly by the fizzling of the opposite nine.

Princeton vs. Eckfords,

at Princeton, June 1, 1872.

Princeton 20; Eckfords 4.

In the game against the Eckfords, there was little or no excitement, for after the first inning, the Princeton nine saw that the game was in their own hands and on this account did not play their best.

The pitcher for Princeton in these games was J. W. Hageman, '72. Certain members of his class assert that Hageman pitched curves, thus preceding "Mac" Mann, '76. There is no doubt that Hageman was an effective pitcher, but it was due to the deceptive pace or speed of his pitching, rather than curves. The first ball would come to the plate at a lightning rate of speed; for the second ball, Hageman would go through exactly the same movements, yet the ball would come in slowly and drop to the ground in front of the plate. Even his catcher was often deceived. It is very probable that with his speed, Hageman was able to curve the ball for an inshoot and an upshoot. But the members of the team, and in particular the catcher, do not remember that he ever pitched curves. At least it was by accident; no open demonstration of curve pitching was made. That was left for "Mac" Mann, '76.

The fall of '72 gave no promises of the success which was to crown the nine in the following spring. For several years the baseball talent in the college has been rapidly developing, the nine becoming stronger and more successful each year; but in the fall of '72, the life and interest in the game seemed to have died out. Without discipline or proper management the nine played nervelessly and carelessly.

Two victories were won over the Seminary nine and only one other game was played, with Rutgers, that resulted in the score of 23-16.

In the spring all was changed. New life and energy seemed to enter the organization. During the winter the members of the team were frequent visitors at the Gymnasium, and they came out in the spring in effective trim for the work before them. By virtue of faithful practise and perfect obedience to good management, they were soon in excellent condition, playing with nerve and steadiness.

The season opened well for Princeton. At the beginning of the game with the Chelseas it looked as if the game would be a fine contest but Princeton outclassed them and they failed to score after the first inning.

This victory gave the team so much confidence that they were unprepared for the defeat of May 5, when Yale played in Princeton for the first time.

The game was a tie until the seventh inning, when Yale made four runs. Princeton played with two substitutes in the place of Bruyere and Lawrence; Beach had hardly recovered from his severe accident, and though he played the game through, his weakness lessened his effectiveness.

Earned Runs, P. 2. Flys Caught, P. 17, Y. 10. Time, 2 hours. Umpire, Mr. Flagg, '75, Yale. Scorers, T. W. Harvey, '75, J. C. Goddard, '73, Yale.

The day was unfavorable, and the spectators and players were both in ill humor by reason of a cold raw wind that blew across the field. The game had hardly opened when Bentley split his hand and Hotchkiss took his place. Yale had the advantage until the seventh inning. Then Princeton made two runs and shut out Yale, the score standing 7-6 in Yale's favor. Princeton was becoming used to Avery and several hits were made this inning. Paton reached first, then Davis made a safe hit that sent Paton to third base. Fredericks hit to shortstop who threw Davis out, but allowed Paton to score. Beach reached first base, and Lawrence fouled out on a passed ball. Fredericks took third base and Beach second, Pell hit a hard liner to left field which brought in both Fredericks and Beach; and on Ernst's fly to centre field. Pell crossed the home plate for Princeton's last run. In the last half of the inning Yale scored one run. In the ninth inning the Princeton men were put out in one, two, three order; then Yale went to the bat. Two fumbles by Bruyere and one by Lawrence allowed Yale to fill the bases with only one man out. Foster made a sacrifice hit that sent Mitchell home. Then Maxwell sent a ball to short right field, which looked as though it would drop safe, but after a hard run Lawrence caught it. This gave Princeton the game by the score of 10-9. The Princeton visitors appreciated very much the impartiality of the umpire and the courtesy of the spectators who applauded the good plays on each side.

From New Haven the nine went to Cambridge where they defeated Harvard in the finest amateur game on record.

Double Play, H. 1. Time, 1 hour and 35 minutes. Umpire, Ross Barnes, Boston. Scorers, T. W. Harvey, '75, A. L. Ware, Harvard.

The game was a remarkable exhibition of nerve, strength, and skill on both sides. Very few errors marred the score; and from the first to the last the excitement was so intense that the crowd almost pressed in upon the diamond. In the second inning, Princeton by good base running, secured two runs. The third inning gave a run for Harvard and a blank for Princeton. Not another run was secured on either side until the eighth inning, when Princeton, by good batting, added one to their score. The remaining inning, being a blinder for both sides, brought to a close what was then the finest amateur game on record, with a score of 3-1 in favor of Princeton.

Harvard was stronger at the bat, but the beautiful field play of Princeton fully made up for any weakness in other respects. The fielding on both sides was at times very brilliant.

Princeton now held the championship of all the colleges, for though Princeton had won and lost one game from Yale, she had beaten Harvard, the acknowledged champion. The Princeton claim was now firmly established on May 24, and 31, when Harvard defeated Yale, 15-16 and 5-29. Princeton made every effort to arrange a third game with Yale, but it was not played until October.

The score of the Princeton-Harvard game added greatly to Princeton's reputation, and upon their return from Cambridge, challenges poured in from the best professional clubs in the country. On May 24, the strong Resolute nine came from Elizabeth, and to their great surprise were defeated.

Earned Runs, P. 2, R. 1. Double Play, Beach, Ernst. Time, 1 hour and 35 minutes. Umpire, A. Van Rensselaer, '71. Scorers, J. W. Peckett, '74, W. B. Greene, '76.

In the first inning the Princeton men were stiff from traveling, and before they knew it, the Resolutes had scored two runs. Then Princeton realized that they had a reputation to sustain; and by hard playing prevented the Resolutes from scoring another run. In the fifth inning the Princeton batters suddenly "got the hang" of the pitcher and scored three runs. This frightened the Resolutes who began to play a "block" game, according to the most approved professional standards. Nevertheless Princeton won 6-2.

After the Resolute game, Princeton had neglected practise, and when Lafayette sent its team to Princeton, on June 7, Princeton allowed them to score six runs in the first inning before a single man was put out. But the playing of the Princeton nine improved with each inning and the final score was 26-11 in Princeton's favor.

The second game was the most exciting of the fall contests. On May 5, 1873, the Chelsea, of Brooklyn, had been defeated by Princeton by the score of 12-1. On October 1, they came down with the determination of retrieving their fortune. For the first three innings, it looked as if they would be successful. Then Princeton began to play in earnest, though it was uphill work; and after eleven innings Princeton won, the score standing 15-14.

But the elation over this victory was followed by depression over the defeat by Athletics. Gross errors were committed by the college nine while the Athletics played a strong and steady game.

Earned Runs, P. 1. Time, 2 hours. Umpire, A. C. Crawford, '74.

At first the excitement was intense but it dwindled into an easy feeling of interest as the Princeton score grew larger and larger. From the outset, Yale seemed to recognize that Princeton would win, but nevertheless they played a strong game. Princeton played steadily and with a precision almost faultless, while their batting was unexampled for safety and distance. The best of feeling prevailed; one of the directors wrote: "A more pleasant straightforward, and gentlemanly set of men, it has never been our lot to entertain, and we have never seen a nine which bore defeat more sensibly and cheerfully."

The fall season closed with a defeat of 5-0 by the Athletics.

In the spring of 1874, the directors improved the grounds, purchased new suits of dark, grey cloth with orange braid for the team, and arranged a large schedule of games. The early games were with professionals, and were excellent practise for the nine before the trip after Commencement to Yale and Harvard.

After many futile efforts to induce Yale and Harvard to come to Princeton, the nine went on an extended tour into New England, but several of the regular players were prevented from playing; and the tour was a disaster. The first game was played with Yale at Hartford.

Earned Runs, Y. 2. Passed Balls, Woods 5, Bentley 1. Bases on Errors, P. 4, Y. 9. Time, 2 hours and 30 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Hastings of Hartford.

A good game was expected, for both nines had been playing well. The spectators were disappointed, however, for they were treated to an exhibition of faultless fielding and excellent batting on one side, and utter demoralization on the other.

The game was called by Scott Hastings at 3.15 P. M., with the Princeton men at the bat. They were retired without scoring and Yale followed suit; and the people began to think they would see a good game and a low score. The next inning, however, Princeton was "whitewashed," and Yale, by good batting, assisted by one or two errors, scored five runs before the third hand could be put out. And it was kept up in this style until the end of the game. Princeton failed to score, except in the fifth inning, and then only by a bad muff of Scudders, assisted by an overthrow by Maxwell. The Yale men batted beautifully, while Princeton failed to hit Avery with any effect, only reaching first base four times on clean hits. One thing may be said in extenuation of Princeton's poor play, their second baseman and one of their best players was unable to play on account of sickness, which necessitated a change in their nine. Their left fielder took second, the center fielder going to left and a substitute playing centre. In the sixth inning, Beach changed with Mann; which had the effect of holding the Yale men down to two runs in the next three innings.

The next day at Cambridge, the nine was more successful, winning by the score of 13-11.

The following account of this game is taken from the Hartford Daily Courant:

"One of the most interesting games of the season was played yesterday on the Hartford grounds between the clubs of Harvard and Princeton. The attendance was small, but the enthusiasm of the spectators was great and was decidedly one-sided, in favor of the Princeton boys. Exactly why this was so it is difficult to say, but it was probably greatly due to the good wishes of the people for Yale in the coming games at Saratoga with Harvard, and as Yale has easily beaten Princeton, there was a strong desire to have the latter club victorious over the Massachusetts nine. Mr Avery of the Yale nine accepted the difficult position of umpire, and although his decisions were satisfactory to the spectators, and at least as accurate as the average, they were unsatisfactory to the Harvards, who, as is their custom, did considerable post-mortem growling. Both clubs played indifferently, showing some remarkable skill in the muffing line, but at times making plays which could not have been excelled by professionals. One very difficult running catch was made by Paton of the Princetons, and three easy balls were dropped at critical times by Williamson at second base, who, however, is not the regular second base man.

"The Harvards did their best in the first inning in which after 'whitewashing' their opponents, they scored five runs. After this the score was well kept under, standing 7-6 in favor of the Princetons at the end of the seventh inning. In the eighth inning the Harvards made a single run tying the game, and in the ninth inning each club made a run, leaving the score 8-8. A dispute arose at the end of this inning over the decision of the umpire. The Harvards had the second and third bases occupied, and Tyng sent a fly ball to the left field striking very near the line, which was captured on the bound by Vandeventer. The umpire decided the ball a foul and the striker out, thus preventing Leeds from tallying, and winning the game. The point to be decided was a doubtful one, and the umpire did right in leaving the game a tie. In the tenth inning, the Princetons scored three runs and 'whitewashed' the Harvards.

"One of the most amusing features of the game was the great interest exhibited by some of our prominent business men in the Princeton boys. One well known bank president, a great lover of the game when asked why his sympathies were with the Jersey men said 'it was because the Princetons were genuine orthodox blue Presbyterians, while the Harvards were badly tinctured with Unitarianism."

This game left Princeton second in the championship series which Yale had won.

Laughlin had the best fielding score during the trip, and Vandeventer led at the bat. This did not, however, prevent Williamson from winning the prize bat offered by Mr. Joseph Priest, for the best batting score of the season; his average was 391, Vandeventer's was 329. During the whole college year, Williamson made 42 base hits, average 403; and Vandeventer 43, average 364; Bruyere put out 184 men, and Woods 84; Mann assisted 66 times and Beach 55 times.

Passed Balls, Denny 1. Umpire, F. Dunning, '76.

In this game, the Philadelphia catcher missed a good many balls and to excuse himself after one very costly passed ball, he said, "That ball went zigzag." Probably he meant that the ball curved, for the pitcher was Cummings, whom the professionals call the "inventor of curves." Undoubtedly Cummings did pitch curves in this game, and even earlier, and he says he learned the trick from curving clam shells on the beach. But, as this history shows, E. Davis, '70 had been pitching curves much earlier than Cummings. In this Philadelphia game, Cummings would stand at the home base when the ball was not in play and pitch, (he did not throw underhand), the ball down to second base and it curved to the left just before it was caught. Another player, York, would throw the ball in from left field and it looked as if it would go away off into right field, but suddenly the ball seemed to drop right down to the base. These peculiar balls puzzled the college players, especially Mann; they saw that the balls curved, but did not realize how it was done.

The excitement of the ball elections had divided the college into two political parties, and the baseball season was closed by a grand game of baseball between the Democrats and Republicans. "Mac" Mann had been pitching more than usual in the previous week and had a very sore second finger, where the ball, on leaving his hand, had worn off the skin. Mann played third base until the game was well advanced, when the opponents sized up the pitcher and were batting him all over the field. Then Mann was coaxed into the box to save the game. In order to save his sore finger, he let the ball go out of his hand in a different manner than usual. The first striker up missed the ball. The second ball was also missed, and Mann noticed that it was peculiar, but could not determine in what respect. He turned to M. W. Jacobus, '77, who was playing shortstop, and said: "Here goes for three strikes." Sure enough the batter struck out. Then Mann said, "Those balls curved." Not content with knowing how to pitch curves he set to work to find why they curved. Finally he worked out the following demonstration:

"B is the ball going toward home plate H, at the rate of 50 feet per second; at the same time revolving on its axis at the rate of 50 feet per second. Hence the portion of the ball at A, as far as the atmosphere is concerned will be going 100 feet per second. The portion of the ball at C, will be going toward H, but as it is also revolving in the opposite direction at the same rate, as far as the atmosphere is concerned, there is no advance. Hence we have an atmospheric pressure on one side of 100 and of 0 on the other. Therefore the ball will be forced out of its course toward E. In order to get the opposite curve, the ball must be twisted so as to revolve in the opposite direction."

All winter long Mann practised in the Gymnasium and in the spring, he had the pleasure of facing many surprised batters. His greatest curve was the outshoot, but he was able to pitch the inshoot and the drop also. This latter, however, had a very small deflection for the rule of that year forbade a pitcher to raise his arm in throwing above his waist. Two years later, when Mann had strained his arm, this rule was changed, and with a full arm motion W. M. Smith, '77, developed the drop, which he used with so much effectiveness, that he has the credit for its invention. As "Mac" Mann himself says, he did not invent the curving of a ball for "as long as baseball has been played and baseballs have had seams with which to catch the air, curve balls have been thrown; and the curve was especially noticeable in the case of a left handed thrower, whose curve was in the opposite direction from that of a right handed thrower." What he did accomplish was to demonstrate the effectiveness of the curve from the pitcher's box, and to revolutionize the manner of delivering the ball to the batter. Unfortunately, however, he was young at the time and too inexperienced to conceal his secret. The chief topic of comment in baseball circles was Mann's pitching, and many players came to Princeton, to watch the college nine play. The fact that so many professionals seemed ignorant of curve pitching and hurried to see Mann, proves conclusively that Mann was the first pitcher to use the curve with any judgment and control over the ball. Very few people outside of ball players knew anything of the discovery and it is extremely amusing to read the following query in the Scientific American of July 28, 1877. "It is claimed that certain baseball pitchers are able to throw a ball so that it can describe a horizontal curve in the air. Is such a thing possible with a perfectly spherical ball and in a still atmosphere?" The cautious editor ventured only to reply: "We have never seen it done." This led to a long public discussion, which finally resulted in some practical experiments, or tests, at the Cincinnati baseball grounds, on October 20, 1877, which were of course successful.

In the spring of '75, great dissatisfaction was uttered against the directors of the Baseball Club. It was murmured that they were not impartial in the selection of the players. The Lit criticises them very severely because they did not organize the nine until late in the season. On the other hand, the students were not supporting the nine, either by attendance or subscription. The directors were unwilling to incur the expense of a large schedule, lest it should increase the deficit; which, usually, they had to make up from their own purses, although this season Mr. Allie Bonner, of the New York Ledger, gave the nine two hundred dollars.

The season began with a defeat by the Chelseas, of Brooklyn.

Earned Runs, C. 3. 2 Base Hits, Hourigan, Richardson. 3 Base Hits, Metcalfe. 1st Base on Errors, P. 6, C. 7. Time, 2 hours. Umpire, Mr. Dunning.

The grounds were in splendid condition, and a numerous assembly had gathered to witness the game. The Princetons went first to the bat, but were summarily retired without scoring. The Chelseas shared the same fate. The Princetons took things coolly, and made two runs in the second inning. This aroused the Chelseas to action, and they used the "whitewash brush with an artistic hand" during the next four innings, retiring their opponents in quick succession for blanks, and, by good batting, overcame the lead gained in the second inning, and came off victorious. The pitching and general fielding of both clubs were good, while the umpiring could not have been better.

The second game was a defeat also, by Harvard. The nine did not play together and support Mann, who pitched very effectively.

Earned Runs, P. 1. Passed Balls, Denny 4, Thatcher 4. Time, 2 hours. Umpire, Mr. F. Dunning, '76. Scorers, T. W. Harvey, '72, Princeton, J. G. King, Harvard.

Tyng, the Harvard third baseman, writes:

"The first man to the bat on our side promptly struck out, the second followed suit, and the third did the same. Out of the first nine men at the bat, eight I think were unable to hit the ball. We had no idea what the trouble was, except that the bat and ball seemed to have a repulsion for each other which we could not overcome. About the fifth inning one of our men, who had been standing behind the catcher, came back with the announcement that the balls were curving away from the batsmen. There was a general exodus on our part to the back stop to watch this unheard-of phenomenon. Sure enough there were the balls coming in for the middle of the plate, and curving off beyond the reach of the bat.

"But we also noticed that Mann was pitching nothing but curves.

"By the time we had fully realized what was happening, six innings of the game had been played, and the score was 7-2 against us. Taking the longest bats we could find and letting the apparently good balls go by, and devoting our energies to those which seemed to be coming directly at us, on the supposition that the curve would carry them out where we could hit them, we began to 'connect' with the ball and finally managed to pull the game out of the fire. Of course Mann's mistake of not varying his curve with a straight ball, was a fatal one. He had got a 'good thing' and on the principle that you cannot get too much of that kind of a commodity, he made the fullest use of it."

After winning the game on May 20, with the Flyaways, of Brooklyn, the nine was defeated on the following day by the Centennials, of Philadelphia, in a close match, with the remarkable score of 2-1.

the audience was in almost breathless suspense watching the issue of the game, alternately applauding the playing of either side. The peculiar pitching of Mann gave the Brooklynites great trouble, while the catching of Dessar won the admiration of all, and when at the close of the game it was announced that Princeton, was the winner by a score of 3-2, Princeton enthusiasm knew no bounds and their cheers rent the air. There were but few errors on either side. The excitement ran high at the beginning of the ninth inning, when the Atlantics had one man on second and third and two men out. Mann made a beautiful play, however, and touched out the man on second who had ventured too far from his base.

On May 26, Yale came to Princeton, and won by the score of 14-4.

In the first inning, Princeton made several errors and allowed Yale to score five runs, which seemed to demoralize completely the play of the Princeton nine.

On May 27, the nine left for Cambridge, where they were defeated by Harvard.

Passed Balls, Thatcher 1. Time, 2 hours and 5 minutes. Umpire, H. Denton, Harvard. Scorers, T. W. Harvey, '75, J. G. King, Harvard.

Harvard played the same steady game that they had played before, while Princeton's misfortunes began almost immediately. Nevertheless the men played a good uphill game during the first six innings when several unfortunate decisions of the umpire blasted all hopes by depriving them of at least four runs, which would have tied the score. After that Princeton played indifferently and listlessly, allowing the opponents to score three runs in the last inning, after the game was really over.

On May 29, the nine met for a second time this year with the unusually strong nine of Yale.

As the Centennials were a professional club, it was supposed their victory would be easy, but so hotly was the game contested that in the eighth inning the score stood 1-1. The first run was made by Princeton, during the second inning; while the Centennials did not score until the third. From this time forth, until the ninth inning, not a run was made by either nine. At the close of the ninth inning, the Centennials scored the winning run on an error. The outfield had almost nothing to do on account of Mann's pitching.

Three days later, Princeton defeated the famous Atlantic Club, of Brooklyn, by the then remarkable score of 3-2.

Bases on Errors, P. 2, Y. 2. Time, 1 hour and 40 minutes. Umpire, F. Dunning, '75. Scorers, T. W. Harvey, '75, W. S. Kenney, Yale.

Both nines were well trained and disciplined,—Yale by a succession of victories, Princeton with the discipline of defeat.

Avery for Yale, and Mann for Princeton, were the most effective pitchers ever brought on the field by college nines. In the first inning, Princeton scored one run and two more in the eighth.

Yale, through errors, succeeded in getting a man on first, both in the first and second innings. From that time throughout the game no Yale man reached first base. The game on both sides was faultless in the fielding. Laughlin at short, and Woods on third, played without errors. Denny behind the bat, and Campbell on first, were equally faultless in their play, while Duffield in left, and Moffat on second made some difficult running catches, Walker, Mann and Denny leading at the bat. The feature of the game, however, was Mann's pitching; while Princeton made eight base hits on Avery's pitching. So successfully did Mann pitch, that Yale failed to secure a single base hit; he had learned by the experience of the Harvard games to vary his pitching and the Yale men, unfamiliar with his motions, could not tell which ball would curve and which straight.

The score of 3-0 in Princeton's favor went upon record as the best college game ever played and the best amateur game at that time recorded.

Princeton was badly defeated on June 1, by the Hartfords.

Earned Runs, H. 3, 3 Base Hits, Woods, Harbridge. Double Plays, Wood-Moffat, Carey-Bond. Time, 1 hour and 45 minutes. Umpire, Charles Daniels.

The game opened well but the bright hopes were dispelled in the fourth inning. Although the Hartfords at first struck out with sufficient regularity to satisfy the most spiteful looker-on, their long practice under Cummings enabled them to quickly recover, and from the fourth inning their base hits were unpleasantly numerous. The season closed with two victories over the Burlingtons, and the New Havens.

Time, 1 hour and 50 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Somerville.

It had been a wonderful season, full of small scores and good playing; though the chief credit belongs to the pitching of Mann. Small scores were less frequent than now, and Princeton was proud of the nine that had lost and won the games with the scores of 2-1, 3-2, 6-2, 4-2. And even yet Princeton boasts of the 3-0 game with Yale, for it is the only game with Princeton, in which Yale did not score a single base hit.

DIRECTORS.

F. Dunning, '76, President; H. L. Harrison, '76, Treasurer; F. Hartley, '77, Secretary; I. H. Hess, '78; F. Bonner, '78; J. M. Woods, '76, Captain.

THE NINE.

J. O. Denny, '77, c.; J. M. Mann, '76, p.; J. A. Campbell, '77, 1st.; H. B. Kaufman, '77, 2nd.; J. M. Woods, '76, 3rd.; D. Laughlin, '77, ss.; J. F. Duffield, '76, lf.; L. M. Walker, '76, cf.; E. Furman, '79, rf. Substitutes: J. M. Mills, '78, R. F. Karge, '78.

In the fall of '75, the old system, by which the management was vested in the irresponsible self perpetuating board of directors was abolished, and the directors were made directly responsible to their classes by election. The nine was organized as soon as college opened, and five games were played.

Time, 1 hour and 25 minutes. Umpire, Mr. F. Dunning, '76.

In the spring of 1876 the management arranged a large schedule of games, which included an extensive tour to New England. But the nine was unsuccessful, for Mann, the efficient pitcher of last year had strained his arm; and it seemed impossible to develop a new pitcher, though at least a half dozen were tried. Of the sixteen games, ten were lost and only six won.

Yale won the game with the help of the umpire. Both nines batted heavily, but played very poorly at critical moments, perhaps because of the extreme excitement of the spectators. After this game the nine practised diligently in the four games before the trip.

An excellent game was played on June 21, with New Haven. The fielding was almost perfect. Though Woods was batted freely in the first three innings, he settled down after that and allowed only two base hits. Nichols pitched a very difficult ball, "one of those double curved balls," which he varied with a slow rising ball, and completely fooled the Princetonnians.

Earned Runs, H. 2.

At the end of the fifth inning the score stood 7-3 in Harvard's favor. In the sixth inning they had made five runs, when it began to rain, and rained hard for twenty minutes. After much hesitation it was decided to resume play again, although the ground was in a very bad state. They made two more runs, leaving the score 10-7 against Princeton. Harvard then made four, thus getting the lead again. The ball was all this time in a wretched state, totally unfit to play with. As Harvard was obliged to catch the train for New York, it was decided to call the game a draw, and no other game could be arranged to decide the match.

The season opened with fair prospects despite the loss by graduation of three strong players, Woods, Mann, and Walker. The former system of directorship was abolished and the captain was given complete charge of the team, both on the field and off. Early in the term the candidates began to practise in the Gymnasium an hour a day. "During the first half hour the men practised calisthenics, following the movements of the most muscular and long winded of the nine. Then the squads go down stairs and practise pitching, throwing, and catching under the direction of the captain." In the fall, the Alaskas, of Brooklyn, came to Princeton, and defeated the College nine in two games. This is the last year in which the 'Varsity nine was organized in the autumn; hereafter no attempt has been made to practise until February, and the fall season has been turned over to the contests between the class nines. Many 'Varsity candidates are trained in these matches and the management acted wisely in encouraging them.

The early matches of the spring, exhibited clearly the varying fortunes of ball players. On one day the team would bat heavily and field perfectly; on the next, no one could make a safe hit or use his judgment in fielding. There was almost no constant work even among the old players.

Earned Runs, P. 2, H. 2. Struck Out, by Smith 2, Ernst 3. Struck at and Missed, P. 22, H. 24. Passed Balls, Funkhouser 3, Tyng 3. Time, 1 hour and 55 minutes. Umpire, Mr. C. S. Bird, Harvard.

Princeton drew a blank in the first inning. For Harvard, Leeds led off with a fine base hit to left field; he stole second base and managed to score, while the next three men went out; Tyng, on a fly well taken by Kaufman, the beginning of a series of brilliant catches; Tower on a foul bound, well taken by Funkhouser, and Thayer on a fine stop and throw by Jim Denny. In the second inning, Princeton went out on three flies without getting to first base. Ernst went out on a throw from third to first; Latham made a base hit, stole second, took third on Wright's base hit, and came in on Dow's base hit; Sawyer followed with a base hit bringing in Wright, four successive base hits earning two runs. The next two men went out on flies to right field. In the next inning, Funkhouser got his base on called balls, but was left on first. Thayer got his base on a passed ball, and managed to score through errors. Kaufman, in the fourth inning, got the first base hit which Princeton made, but was left on first; Dow got his base on an error, and was helped around by strong, though not safe hits. In the fifth and sixth innings, Latham was the only Harvard man to reach first base. Princeton failed to score until the sixth inning. Then with the score 5-0 in Harvard's favor, Funkhouser made the first Princeton run through the errors of Leeds, Tyng and Dow, assisted by Kaufman's base hit. In the seventh inning, Princeton earned two more runs from the base hits of Duffield, Jacobus and Funkhouser. For Harvard, Tower made a fine drive for three bases and came in on a dropped fly by Denny. In the eighth inning, Kaufman led off with his third base hit, Duffield got his base on errors, and Smith made a fine base hit to centre, which brought in the first two runners. Tower threw to Tyng to cut off Duffield at the home plate; but Ernst, seeing that such an effort was useless, leaped in the air, taking the ball with one hand, and returned it to Sawyer in season to put out Smith, in one of the finest plays of the game.

The game was becoming very exciting as the score stood 6-5 in Harvard's favor, and in the eighth inning Harvard failed to score. In the ninth, Funkhouser went out on a fly to Ernst, Laughlin out on a foul to Tyng, and the agony was over by a pop-up to Leeds. Tyng got his first by an error of right, and was helped to get a run by a fine base hit of Thayer. Tower made a fine hit, which everybody thought was good for at least three bases; but Kaufman, after a fine run, made an extraordinary catch.

Umpire, Mr. J. A. Campbell.

A very exciting game was played with the Alaskas on May 22. For several innings neither side scored and the Princetonians feared lest their nine should lose their reputation of never retiring from the field without scoring at least one point. In the ninth inning, F. H. Denny repeated the performance of last years' game with New Haven, in making a two base hit, thus bringing in a run for Princeton and tying the game. But the Alaskas won in the eleventh inning.

Earned Runs, P. 2. Time, 2 hours. Umpire, Mr. Bunce, Brooklyn.

Yale won the game on May 23, by her base running. Princeton surpassed the Yale men at the bat and in the field played equally well, if not better, than they did. In the seventh inning, Princeton batted Yale's favorite pitcher as no nine ever before had done. Laughlin went to the bat first and sent the ball to Wheaton, who immediately put it to first and Laughlin retired. Furman followed but went out at first. J. Denny succeeded in getting to second base but was left there by Kaufman who struck out, though later he redeemed his record by making four base hits. The visitors then succeeded to the bat, but their first three men went out in order, not one of them getting to the first base in safety. In the first half of the second inning, F. Denny took his base on called balls, went to second on Duffield's strike, and was brought in by Funkhouser; but Funkhouser and Duffield were left on bases. Clark then took the bat for Yale and sent a fly to Smith which was taken. Williams followed with a fine base hit and succeeded in scoring his run just before Downer made the third out. In the third inning, J. Denny and Kaufman both led off with base hits but were left on second and third bases. Carter was the first at the bat in the fourth inning and got his base on balls but was put out at third. Wheaton then made a base hit and was followed around the bases by Morgan, two runs thus being scored for Yale. In the fifth inning, the first three Princeton men at the bat went out in order, Kaufman gaining his second by a base hit, but was put out at third. Downer opened the fifth inning for Yale with a splendid base hit, stole second, got to third base and home on a wild throw of F. Denny. No more runs were made in this inning, and the sixth inning began with the score 5-1 in Yale's favor. In this, as in the fifth inning, the first three Princeton men at the bat went out in order and took the field to retire Yale in the same manner. In the seventh inning, Smith got his first and second bases on errors of Morgan, and was brought in by Laughlin, who made an effective base hit. Furman then went out at first, but J. Denny brought Laughlin home by a base hit, stole second himself and was brought home by a base hit of Kaufman, who succeeded in getting to third but was left there, with F. Denny on second. Smith sent the ball spinning into the field and reached first, then immediately went to second on an error by Duffield. He succeeded in scoring this run. Princeton in the eighth inning succeeded only in getting Smith as far as second base before the side was retired. Yale then took the bat and retired with the same record—only one man reaching second. In the ninth inning neither Princeton nor Yale was able to score anything, each getting a man as far as second but there he stuck.

As the nine started off on Monday, June 4, it seemed as if the fates were kind and propitious. But their kindness soon expressed itself in rain. Tuesday at New Haven, rain; Wednesday at New Haven, rain; Thursday at Amherst, rain; Friday at Harvard, rain. But late in the afternoon, between showers, the game was called and with a very wet ball, one of the two worst games ever played by a Princeton team, resulted in a victory of 16-1 for Harvard.

The game was very slow and uninteresting. Princeton made a wretched showing at the bat and in the field. They were unable to do anything with Ernst's pitching, nine of them striking out and most of the base hits being "scratch hits." The one run of Princeton was made on the errors of Ernst, Tyng and Thayer. The nine travelled all night to New Haven, and Saturday was rainy also. However, Yale was willing to play, and the second worst game of Princeton's history was played in the rain, resulting in a defeat in which for the first time in all her history, Princeton failed to secure a run, and in which the old victory of 3-0 (May 29, 1875), which had rankled in Yale's breast, was fully repaid by a defeat of 8-0.

Yale was the first at the bat, when Wheaton hit to centre field, which was received with great applause and made the Yale boys feel confident of their success. Wheaton and Clark both scored. Princeton sent Laughlin to the bat but he struck out; then Furman and Denny went out on fly balls. In the second inning, Downer sent a "flyer" down the left field and secured second, amid considerable applause. For Princeton, F. Denny sent a fine fly down to Brown in left field who secured it handsomely. In the third inning, Wheaton knocked a fly just to the right of the centre field, and although the first and second baseman and the fielders all started for it, not one got the ball, on account of an error of judgment by Capt. Laughlin. Wheaton in running for second base, collided with Warren with a heavy thud and it was several minutes before he was able to go on. Toward the close of the Princeton half of the third inning, Princeton had three men on bases and considerable interest was manifested to see if J. Denny would bring any of them home. He hit to Bigelow who fielded Funkhouser out at home, assisted by Morgan. There was nothing noteworthy in the fourth inning except wild throwing by both clubs. In the fifth inning, Wheaton hit a pretty ball into right field over the fielder's heads and went to second, amid the applause of the spectators. It was really the best hit of the game and seemed to demoralize Princeton. J. Denny, in Princeton's half inning, hit a handsome fly to the out field but it was well taken by Smith. In the sixth inning, Warren made a bad fumble of a ball hit by Bigelow. Kaufman later hit a high fly to left field, which was taken by Bigelow about as "hot as they make them," but in throwing to second he threw wildly and it failed to do the work intended. From now on, the interest in the game began to lag as it was evident that Princeton was overmatched. The three closing innings were without any particular playing, except perhaps in the seventh inning when Princeton for a second time had three men on bases and were unable to get any of them in. Throughout the whole game Princeton had batted strongly—only one striking out—and many long and hard hits were made to the out field; but partly owing to the softness of the ball and partly to the agility of the fielders they were inevitably "gobbled."

The nine came back from the tour sadder if not wiser. The general demoralization in these two games cannot certainly be attributed to anything else, but the fact that travelling from Monday to Friday in the rain, unable even to toss the ball, is hardly the best discipline for a hard game. Night travelling and continual change unfit men for hard labor.

In the fall of 1877, the old policy of organizing the 'Varsity nine for a few games before the winter was abandoned, and just as at the present time all the baseball energy was directed upon the class games. The College, perhaps remembering the bad defeats in June, took an unusual interest in these class contests, looking upon them as "feeders" for the 'Varsity nine—as indeed they were. In October, the Lit. says: "Never in the last three years has so much interest been manifested in baseball as at present, and never has it been so unfortunate as to see so much bitter feeling between classes on its account."

'Varsity practise began in March, with two teams in the field. The Princetonian says: "The players are careless. One of the greatest troubles with Princeton baseball players is that they trust too much to their natural ability as players." But even in the first game, Princeton batted well and made few errors.

Harvard went first to the bat, and was retired in one, two, three order, while Princeton followed her example. In the second inning, Ernst was thrown out at first; Holden went out on a fly well taken by Dodge at centre field; Wright made a base hit to right field and Alger took first base on three balls. Latham made a base hit which brought Wright home from second base, and a base hit from Nunn brought Latham home, Funkhouser making two successive overthrows to second base. Two runs were made by Harvard in the fourth inning, two in the seventh, and one in the eighth. Princeton made no runs and seemed quite unable to get hold of Ernst's swift pitching. Their fielding also was very careless and showed evidence of a lack of proper training. On Harvard's part the batting was not strong, but the fielding was excellent, although the good work done by Ernst and Tyng gave very few chances to the fielders.

In the second Harvard game, on the following day, Princeton rallied, and the contest was keen throughout, in spite of the high wind, bitter cold, and showers of rain, which twice interrupted the playing. The fielding was the finest ever seen in a college game at Princeton. Long runs, good catches, and neat stops were frequently made and, considering the wet, the errors were remarkably few.

It was unfortunate for Princeton, that the ball was rendered slippery and unmanageable while Harvard was at the bat in the seventh inning. This circumstance rendered pardonable some of the fielding errors which let in three runs. Before this, Harvard had not been able to score, although they had three men on third base. In the seventh, after two men were out, Furman missed a fly catch, which gave Harvard three runs, and this was the only inning in which Harvard scored. In the same inning, Funkhouser's hands became so sore that he had to retire. Wigton raised great applause in the third inning, by a lucky "one-handed, left-handed, back-handed" catch in far right field, followed by a throw to Funkhouser, which cut off Nunn in his attempt to run home from third base.

The Yale game of May 15 was very exciting from beginning to end, and the victorious nine were shouldered and carried about the field, when Yale went to the bat for the last time in the ninth inning, and was retired without scoring. In the first inning, Yale was retired, but Princeton made one run. Hunt was given his base on balls by Carter, stole second and third, and came home on a fly, knocked to left field by Funkhouser. But by the fourth inning, Yale had four runs to Princeton's one. In the fifth inning, Hunt and Funkhouser, through errors and a base hit, made two runs, and Clarke tied the score in the next. A tie it remained until the eighth, when Snook got his base on three balls, and finally, on errors of the catcher, came home. The game might still be lost. But Carter knocked a long fly to Clarke, which he caught well. Then Ives and Hutchinson struck out, and Princeton had won her first college game on home grounds for the last five years.

*Game forfeited to Princeton by Resolutes leaving for an early train.

Great surprise was caused in college when, at the end of May, it became known that the 'Varsity nine had disbanded for the season. This action seemed necessary, as it was found to be impossible for the nine to play either Harvard or Yale at the times previously agreed upon. The date which had been fixed for the return game with Yale was the fifth of June, but that was the first day of the annual examinations. The Faculty justly refused to give the team permission to be absent from college during examinations, and as the Yale men could play at no other time, Princeton felt compelled to give up the trip. At this time the Princetonian says: "Even had we played Yale before Commencement little would have been gained. In case of defeat we would have been obliged to play a third or deciding game at some time after Commencement, and the trouble and expense incidental to keeping the nine together and in practice during the several weeks of the summer vacation seemed a high price to pay for a probable second place in the championship. As we look upon the record of the nine for this season there are, of course, some things to regret, but also some which are pleasant and agreeable remain. In many of the games with professional nines our men played with culpable carelessness; their errors, however, have been sufficiently condemned. In the second Harvard game, the nine developed such strength that we were led to believe in their victory and the victory to be one of the most substantial ones that has yet been reaped. Through this year's contest, as the development out of almost raw material, seven of the strong '77 nine having graduated, leaving only Funkhouser, Furman and Karge as a nucleus, the victory of next year seems sure."

However, the dates were finally fixed, and on June 3, Princeton met Harvard, at Cambridge.

The game opened with Hunt at the bat. Howe let the third strike pass him, and Hunt took his base, stole second, and reached third, and then home on successive passed balls. The next three men went out on one, two, three order. For Harvard, Thayer led off with a base hit; Ernst followed, by knocking the ball among some bushes in the right centre field. Dodge was unable to find the ball and both men scored. Then Fisher struck out, Wright made a base hit, and Holden took his base on Karge's error, but Latham and Howe were retired before any more runs could be made. In the second inning, neither side scored but in the third inning, Harvard added two runs to their score, and Princeton made her second and last run of the game. The score stood 4-2, until the seventh inning, when Harvard on two base hits, two sacrifice hits, and a number of errors, made four more runs. Before the game closed Harvard had scored ten runs. The most noteworthy play of the game was in the fifth inning. Karge hit a line ball over Holden's head in left field. He took second base on the hit, but in attempting to reach third base was caught by a beautiful throw from far left field, directly into the hands of the third baseman.

In the first inning of the game with Yale, on June 6, five base hits off Furman, aided by six fielding errors, allowed Yale to make eight runs. After this, when too late, Princeton played beautifully. Furman pitched as of old, and was well backed. After the first inning only three errors were made. Princeton made her two runs as follows: Dodge made a base hit and was thrown out in attempting to steal second; Karge was called out on strikes; Cutts then took first on a fumble by Parker at third and stole second; Clarke hit to Carter who over-threw first, Cutts coming home, and Clarke taking third. Clarke then came home on a passed ball.

Earned Runs, Y. 1. 1st Base on Errors, P. 8, Y. 6. Struck Out by Carter 9. Time, 2 hours and 35 minutes. Ump. re, Mr. Wilson.

The deciding game with Yale was played in Hoboken, on June 21. The high wind which prevailed was dead against the battery, and it helped to make the match more of a trial of skill between the pitchers. Hutchinson began the game with a long, high ball to right field, on which he easily made second base. Parker then hit a short ball to Hamill, who muffed it very badly, and a passed ball helped to fill second and third bases. Smith then popped up a high ball, which Hamill held, after which Ripley sent a hot bouncer to left centre for two bases, Hutchinson and Parker scoring on the hit. Downer then knocked a three-base hit, bringing Ripley in. On a wild pitch Downer scored, and then the next two men struck out, retiring the side. Princeton went into the bat to recover the lost ground, but Carter threw Hunt out at first. Though Furman reached first on a muff by Hutchinson, the latter made up for it by assisting Walden to make a neat double play. Practically this inning gave the game to Yale, as the lead was too great to overcome against such fine strategic play as Carter brought to bear against the Princetonians. Furman began to pitch solely for speed, and the result was terribly hard on his catcher. On the part of Princeton, they played without heart after the first inning. In the sixth, Snook, who had pluckily faced Furman's wild delivery, was forced to retire with an injured finger, Funkhouser taking his place. The weak spot of the team was at short-stop. This and the wild pitching was the causes of defeat, aside from their weak batting. While Funkhouser was playing in centre field he made a fine throw to third, catching Smith there.

All winter long the Baseball Association had been hampered with the large debt of $236. Last year the team met almost no support from the students. At many of the games with professional nines there were scarcely so many as twenty spectators; and as each of these nines was paid $60, and on each occasion the Association had to pay for the use of the grounds, the losses were many and frequent. After the Association had threatened not to put any team on the field unless the debt was paid, liberal cash subscriptions soon delivered them from embarrassment.

The first game of the season was against the rather weak Uticas, but on April 24, the star team of Holyoke came to Princeton, and won by a score of 11-0. In the last half of the second inning, there were two men on bases and two out, when an easy fly was knocked to third and muffed. This luckless accident seemed to demoralize the nine, and during the rest of the inning, and the third, the visitors succeeded in scoring eight runs by a succession of overthrows, passed balls and muffs on Princeton's part, and some first-rate batting on their side.

Time, 2 hours and 40 minutes. Umpires, Mr. Britton, '79, U. P., Mr. Pitney, '79, Princeton.

On April 26, Princeton played the nine from the University of Pennsylvania, for the first time in its history. The game was full of errors on both sides. The Pennsylvania pitcher gave a number of men their bases on balls, and this pitching taken with the third baseman's fumbling and overthrow, would have insured a large score. Pennsylvania scored half of their runs in the seventh inning, when the Princeton nine fairly outdid themselves in poor fielding, but Princeton made their constitutional brace in the last inning and scored ten runs, owing partly to the utter demoralization of the visiting team and partly to some strong batting.

Princeton lost the Yale game on May 3, through its own miserable playing. A grounder to short-stop and third base, usually the worst, was on this day the safest hit and in fact were the hits that won the game. In the first inning, Van Dyke, Hamill, and Warren scored on base hits, while Horton scored on errors. Yale retired without scoring. No runs in the second inning. In the third inning, Princeton again failed to score but Hutchinson gained first on Budd's error, and succeeded in reaching home. In the fourth inning, Princeton was again blanked, and by a succession of errors, allowed Yale to overtake them and finally get the lead by 5-4. Again Princeton was retired without scoring, and Yale had no trouble in scoring four more runs on base hits of Walden, Camp and Ripley, and errors by third, short-stop and catcher. Yale's lead was decreased in the sixth inning by two, in the seventh inning by two, leaving the score 9-8. Princeton failed to score during the remainder of the game and Yale added two each in the eighth and ninth innings, on errors by Princeton.

On May 23, Harvard came to Princeton, and although they insisted upon playing a graduate named Tyng, they were defeated by the score of 5-2. The absence of Ernst seemed to demoralize the whole Harvard nine. Van Dyke scored for us by a base hit and errors of Alger, while Tyng and Howe tallied for Harvard through the unfortunate errors of Wigton and Schenck. Then for inning after inning, did Harvard retire without scoring. Once in a while a man would succeed in reaching first base, only to be cut off at second by Schenck, caught napping by Horton, or left at the end of the inning where his presence could do no harm. Eight times were they blanked, while Princeton kept adding to their score, tallying twice in the fourth inning, once in the fifth and sixth, leaving Princeton victors by the score of 5-2. Van Dyke made the first run for Princeton, reaching first on a base hit and home on successive passed balls. Hamill hit to left field, stole second and reached home on passed balls. Warren, having taken first on called balls, and second on Alger's error was brought home by Pennock's long hit to centre field. Hamill and Warren deserve particular praise for the steadiest and most brilliant playing. The former assisted in a beautiful double play in the eighth inning, by dropping an easy fly, and after touching his own base, throwing the ball to third, thus putting out two forced runners.

Left on Bases, P. 3, Y. 1. 1st Base on Errors, P. 2, Y. 7. Struck Out by Horton 2, Lamb 7. Passed Balls, Schenck 1. Time, 2 hours and 20 minutes.

Princeton was defeated in the second Harvard game on the next day, but only with the assistance of the protested "old-graduate, confidence restoring, never-wear-out pitching and catching machines, one useless without the other, and Harvard lifeless without both." No runs were scored until the second inning, when Pennock scored by means of a base hit, good running, and a splendid slide to the home plate. Harvard made three runs in the fourth inning, and two more in the fifth, two in the seventh and one in the ninth, making a total of eight runs. Princeton meanwhile scored only one more run during the sixth inning, but had two men on bases, and one out in the ninth when McNair and Schenck struck out. Harvard had the advantage of a fresh pitcher, while they themselves had gotten somewhat used to Horton. The Princetonian says: "Although we depreciate the errors, yet we feel that there is some excuse for the nine playing, as they did, under discouraging circumstances. The umpire was decidedly partial to Harvard, and his refusing to call strikes militated strongly against the effectiveness of Horton's pitching. The delightful spirit of love and good will cherished by the umpire toward the Harvard nine, was illustrated by his remark: 'I am afraid, Mr. Ernst, I will have to call you out.' Charming! We admire it; it showed his good breeding and courtesy; he was unwilling that a painful necessity should interfere with their cordial good feeling and accord. But mainly it was discouraging because the contest was not against the Harvard team, but a part of the Harvard team and men who were in fact professional players, old and skilled, who had played ball for years. We do not pretend, nor do we ask our nine to compete with such teams. We have strictly and properly a college nine, which is changed from year to year, with incoming and outgoing classes, often composed almost entirely of new material; and it is only with like nines that we can expect to compete fairly and equally. We do not consider ourselves defeated by Harvard, and we assert with the utmost confidence that we can defeat in a series of games, any strictly college nine that Harvard can put in the field against us. It is a blot on the fair name of Harvard, that she descends to such tricks to obtain the championship, and a shame that with her large number of men, she is so utterly helpless on the ball field without the assistance of graduates of three years standing."

In the first inning of the game of May 31, Yale retired Princeton in one, two, three order. Hutchinson led off with a base hit, took second and third on a sacrifice hit, when Horton prevented a run by striking out Walden, after seven balls had been called. In the second inning, after two men were out, Horton took his base by Hopkins' muff of Parker's throw, but was left on second. After Hopkins had been thrown out by Pennock, Camp reached second by a safe hit and a passed ball. Clark retired on a foul bound to Schenck, and Camp scored on Van Dyke's fumble of a hit by Watson. Schenck's catch of a foul tip from Ripley's bat closed the inning. From this time to the ninth, neither side scored, Camp's hit in the fourth inning, being the only safe one for either side. In the last inning Schenck struck out; Wigton followed with Princeton's only base hit, took second on Ripley's fumble, and third by Van Dyke's sacrifice, where he was left, Pennock striking out. Hopkins took first on a low throw by Warren; Camp followed with a terrific liner to Pennock, who barely reached and stopped it. Pennock made an overthrow to Wigton, upon which both Hopkins and Camp scored. The other three men were retired without reaching first base. The Princeton batters struck time and time again in the infield, but the omnipresent Hutchinson, Parker and Walden were always most inconveniently out of place, so that Princeton failed to score.

Coolidge opened the Harvard game of June 2, with a slow ball along the third base foul line, which the umpire first called "foul" and then changed to "fair." Pennock, balked by the change of decision, made an overthrow to first base, which let Coolidge advance to third. The latter scored on a wild pitch. From this time the fielding for Princeton was excellent, and Ernst was hit harder than ever before by Princeton, though only three safe hits were made. Harvard scored again in the third inning, on two passed balls and a sacrifice hit; and in the fourth, by Horton's error, base hits by Folsom and Olmsted, and a sacrifice by Wright. Errors of Elliott and Folsom gave Princeton a run in the first inning; a base hit by Schenck, aided by a wild throw to second by Folsom, and Wigton's sacrifice added one in the third; and errors of Ernst and Folsom and a base hit by Hamill brought in the tying run in the sixth. At this point the ball had become so slippery from the rain, which had continued throughout the game, that at the request of Captain Wright the game was called, with the score a tie.

The game with Brown, on June 4, was characterized by heavy batting and loose fielding on both sides. Up to the seventh inning, the defeat of Princeton seemed inevitable; then, however, good batting by the Princeton men affected the demoralization of Brown, and another drawn game was the result, play being called with the score a tie, in order to allow the Princeton men to take the boat.

The season closed with an exhibition Commencement game against the University of Pennsylvania.

In a retrospective view of the season, the Princetonian says: "One thing that militated against the success of the nine was the lateness in finding the right material; our improvement after the first Yale game was immense; and if the same nine which played on the tour had played throughout, that game would certainly have been ours, and in all probability, the whole result would have been different. The selection of the proper men cannot, of course, be governed at once; it must be done by testing, and this requires time; but it may be aided, to a great degree, by playing as many practice games as possible before any college games. Again there has been need of more candidates. Every man who has any proclivity toward baseball should be encouraged; the larger the number of candidates the better the chances to secure good players. Those candidates, moreover, should be kept trying through the whole season. The competition ought to be active and close; if every man on the nine knew that behind him there was a player nearly his equal, it would be productive of good work and careful playing. Who will play, ought to be the unanswered question and the most unsettled point in regard to the nine, as far as the players themselves are concerned; the selection of the nine should be the last thing before a game. One good feature in this year's management was the character of the nines brought here for practise-playing; none but the best should be secured."

On the sixth of December, 1879, delegates from Amherst, Brown, Dartmouth, Yale, Harvard and Princeton, met at Springfield, and formed the American College Baseball Association with the following officers: President, H. Townsend, Harvard; Vice-Presidents, W. J. Stuart, Amherst, and L. Warren, Princeton; Secretary and Treasurer, I. F. Shepley, Yale. A constitution was adopted which included the following rule of eligibility: "Any student who has been in regular attendance for the whole of any college year in some one department of the University, shall be eligible in that year for the University nine. Suspension shall not be held to interfere with regular attendance but no student shall be eligible during the term of suspension, and any student who shall, after this date, play upon a professional nine or receive pay therefore, shall not be eligible."

Yale refused to join this Association because the rule of eligibility was not made retroactive, so as to exclude Richmond from the Brown team. But by December of the next year, Yale had joined and the Association was made complete.

There were very few of the usual practise games with professional teams, not because of Faculty or financial restraint, but because the number of available clubs in the field was much smaller than formerly.

In the first championship game against Harvard, Duffield led off with a clean base hit, and came home on an overthrow of Winsor to second and Nichols' fumble. Warren went out on strikes, followed by Hamill, who made a safe hit to left field. Van Dyke struck out. Cutts sent a three base hit over right fielder's head and reached home on an error. For Harvard, Coolidge led off, hit a pop fly to Cutts, and retired. Shattuck made first on three strikes, but there he was left when the side retired. In the second inning, Princeton did some more hard hitting, scoring five single base hits, which together with Harvard's error, increased their score to nine runs. Harvard played pluckily to overcome this lead but did not succeed. In the third inning, Leavitt scored the first base hit for Harvard, but was left on third base. In the ninth inning, the Princeton nine became careless, and by passed balls allowed Harvard to make four runs.

The second game with Harvard on the following day was merely an exhibition game, but proved to be much more exciting than the championship game. Neither side scored in the first two innings, but in the third, Harvard scored four runs by three base hits and a passed ball. For Princeton, Horton made first on three strikes, Duffield followed with a base hit. Hamill and Van Dyke each sent a hot grounder to short-stop and made their bases. Before the inning closed Princeton had tied the score. In the remaining innings Princeton scored five runs and Harvard only one.

Princeton played Dartmouth at Hoboken, on June 1. No runs were made until the fifth inning. Both Schenck and McCune hit safely, but the next two men struck out. Rafferty was the next man at the bat and hit a hot grounder to Cushman, who threw badly to first, and McCune followed Schenck over the home plate. In the ninth inning, after two men had been put out, Rundlett made a safe hit. Then an error sent Perry in safety to first base and Rundlett to third. Cushman came to the bat at this critical juncture, and hit to Horton, who stopped the ball and threw it to Schenck in time to touch out Rundlett sliding home, and thus end the game. This game, largely a pitchers' contest, was one of the finest exhibitions of college baseball played that year.

In the Brown game, neither side scored until the third inning, when Waterman reached first base on an error by short-stop, stole second, and came home on a base hit to centre field by Meador, who reached second on McCune's attempt to shut out Waterman at the plate. Meador went to third on a wild pitch and came home on White's two-base hit. Princeton was at a decided disadvantage because of the long grass and buildings on the field. Their first run was scored by Duffield in the fourth inning. He hit safely, advanced to second base on Warren's sacrifice hit to Dilts, and came home on Van Dyke's base hit. Van Dyke made a most remarkable catch in this game. He ran back, caught the ball close to the fence, struck the fence at almost full speed, rolled over, but held up his hand with the ball in it.

2 Base Hits, Van Dyke, McCune. Bases on Errors, P. 7; H. 3. Struck Out by Horton 8, Wild Pitch, Horton 1, Folsom 1. Passed Balls, Schenck 2, Winsor 4. Time, 2 hours and 35 minutes. Umpire, Mr. S. A. Libby.

In the championship game with Harvard, on June 4, Princeton scored four runs in the first inning. Duffield hit to left field, and a bad throw by Edwards allowed him to go to third, while Warren reached second base and Van Dyke third. Van Dyke came in on a passed ball but Cutts was put out. Schenck reached first on a missed third strike, and scored by the assistance of McCune's hit and a passed ball. In the fifth inning, Folsom and Edwards made base hits in succession. Next Coolidge hit a long fly to left which Van Dyke, after a hard run, dropped, and Folsom and Edwards scored. Van Dyke tried to throw out Coolidge at third, but he threw low and the ball struck Cutts and bounded to one side. Cutts ran for the ball, but threw it low to Warren, who took his place at third. The ball passed Warren and Coolidge scored. This was the nearest approach to a rattle which Princeton had yet made. In the ninth inning, Holden scored on two errors and Edwards on a hit by Coolidge. Princeton came to the bat with the score 6-5 in favor of Harvard. McCune made a two-base hit and took third while Winsor was throwing Winton out at first. Horton hit to Coolidge, who, fearing that McCune would run home, did not throw it to first. Horton went to second and obtained third on a passed ball, McCune scoring. Winsor dropped Duffield's third strike and threw badly to first, striking Duffield in the back and allowing Horton to come home with the winning run. Winton played a remarkable game at first, putting eighteen men out and four at least on very difficult catches of wild balls, although he was suffering with malarial chills.

In the first inning of the exhibition game, Harvard scored two runs. Coolidge reached first on Duffield's error, and second on a passed ball. Olmsted took first on nine balls. Fessenden hit a grounder to right field, and Horton returned the ball in time to shut out Coolidge at home. Meanwhile Olmsted took third base and Fessenden second. Olmsted scored on a wild pitch, and Fessenden came in on Shattuck's safe hit. Princeton had three men on bases, but could not score until the third inning, when Duffield reached first on an error by Fessenden, was advanced by sacrifice hits, and came home on an error. In the fifth inning, after two men were out, Van Dyke made a base hit and stole second. Both scored when Richardson fumbled Schenck's grounder. In the seventh, Warren knocked a three base hit and was brought home by Van Dyke's safe hit. An error gave Cutts his base, Van Dyke taking third; Schenck made first and Van Dyke scored on Folsom's error. Cutts was put out at third, but Schenck came home on an error by the right fielder, on a ball batted by McCune. In the ninth, Warren led off with a two base hit, took third on a sacrifice hit by Van Dyke, and scored on an error by shortstop.

On June 7, Princeton played its second game with Dartmouth, this time at Hanover. The result was an easy victory for Princeton. In the first inning, Duffield reached first on a strike out and passed ball, and came home. In the fifth inning, Duffield made a two base hit allowing Rafferty to score, and came in on two errors. Singles by Schenck, Cutts and Horton, and McCune's two base hit yielded five more runs.

Rain.

June 9, the day of the game with Yale, found Princeton in a crippled condition. Winton was on the sick list; Hamill off for injuries. In the fifth inning, Rafferty who was playing second, was hurt and forced to retire. Having no other substitutes there, it was necessary for Princeton to call in P. N. Jackson, '81, whose only training had been in playing "catch" back of East College. A re-arrangement was required to finish the game; Duffield went to second, Jackson to first, Horton to right and Archer to pitch.

With this crippled team it was not possible to win, though a stubborn game was played. Very little interest had been taken in this game by Princeton, because Yale was not in the Association, the loss or victory of this game would not affect Princeton's standing in the Association. Ten days of unaccustomed knocking about and the bad news of the spread of typhoid fever at Princeton had decidedly demoralized the nine.

The pitcher and catcher played the greater part of the game for Amherst, on June 12. The left-handed delivery of Sawyer was too much for Princeton. Could the latter have batted more freely, even though it had not been for base hits and had given the Amherst infield and outfield more chances to make errors, defeat would have been avoided. But of the thirty-one men at the bat for Princeton, eleven struck out and eight went out on fouls; only twelve balls were struck inside the foul lines. Two weeks of traveling, however, with seven games of ball, would be very likely to diminish the usual strength of any non-professional nine. Princeton's only run was made by Duffield who hit safely for first, reached third on a wild throw of Woodward to second and came home on a base hit by Schenck.

Princeton vs. Amherst,

at Princeton, June 22, 1880.

Princeton 9, Amherst 0.

By Default.

The nine looked forward eagerly to the second Amherst game which would have decided whether Princeton would receive the championship pennant without further contests, or would meet Brown, in a deciding game. Consequently there was dissatisfaction when Amherst failed to appear on the field on June 22, and the game was given to Princeton by default. The men preferred to have a chance of winning outright the pennant.

Sickness and injuries interfered seriously with Princeton, in the closing contests of the season, and cost it two important games, yet the summary shows strong work throughout. Twenty-one games were played and only five lost, while a forfeited game made further play for the championship unnecessary. The Princeton team was easily entitled to the pennants. With the regular members playing, and in condition, the Princeton nine of 1880 was clearly the strongest in the college field.

Earned Runs, P. 1. Left on Bases, P. 2, M. 4. 1st Base on Errors, M. 5. Struck Out by Archer 2, Daly 9. Bases on Balls by Archer 1, Daly 2. Wild Pitch, Archer. Passed Balls, Schenck 3. Time, 1 hour and 50 minutes. Umpire, Mr. S. Brown, '81.

After eleven practice games, Princeton met Yale on May 7. In the first inning, an overthrow by Schenck to first base allowed two men to score. Wadleigh reached first base on a muff. Rafferty took first on balls, and Wadleigh scored on Schenck's base hit, while Rafferty stole home on Watson's passed ball. After two men were out in the second inning, Princeton scored three runs. Archer got his base on balls. Duffield followed on an error of Gardner and a two-base hit by Wadleigh brought Archer home. Rafferty reached first on an error, which allowed Duffield to score. McCune made a base hit which brought in Wadleigh. But bad errors in the fourth inning, gave Yale a lead of one run, which she held to the end of the game.

1881—A. McCUNE, '81.

1882—O. RAFFERTY, '82.

BASEBALL CAPTAINS—1877-1882.

The first game upon the team's return was again at the professional team of Washington. In the ninth inning, Princeton men went to the bat with the score 7-3 in favor of Washington. Three single hits and a three-base hit together with errors gave Princeton four runs and the score was tied. For four more innings the score remained a tie until with two men out, Farrell took first on an easy fly ball that was allowed to drop on the ground back of third base, and came in on two successive base hits.

The first Harvard game was stopped in the fifth inning by rain, and Princeton lost the second through poor batting. The tendency was to send high flies to the out-field. Harvard played a fine game, but her in-field was given little chance of showing what they were worth, because of Princeton's batting, for no less than fifteen men were put out on fly balls and strikes. Princeton's one run was made by Loney who got to first base on balls. By a beautiful run and slide he stole second base in spite of Harvard's faultless fielding; Winton then retired and Archer came to the bat. Meantime Loney had gone to third base on a passed ball. Archer struck at the ball three times, but Nichols did not hold the third strike and threw to first allowing Loney to score. The fourth inning had usually been the critical inning for Princeton, but this was passed without any errors. In the fifth inning, Folsom knocked a clean base hit, Duffield threw wildly to Winton, and Folsom, who had overrun his base and stopped, immediately started for second base without first touching his base as the rules required. After a long discussion the umpire permitted him to remain at second base, because, he said, he did not see the runner stop. Wadleigh muffed a fly and Folsom scored. Then Burt scored on a base hit by Snow. After the sixth inning, no Princeton man reached second. Olmsted swift grounder to Wadleigh, which he fumbled, followed by Nichols's two-base hit, gave Harvard another run, and the last was made by Nichols who scored on an error.

On May 28, Princeton was defeated by Brown. In the first inning, Dilts reached first on a slow safe hit to third base, stole second, and came home on a passed ball. In the fourth inning, Princeton tied the score; Rafferty was given his base on balls, stole second by pretty base running, and was brought home by McCune's hard hit to centre field. The fifth was the lucky inning for Brown. J. Greene made a safe hit, Barker reached first on Rafferty's error. Gladding took first on three strikes, though Greene was forced out at third. Doron brought Barker in and came home on Waterman's sacrifice hit. Later Waterman scored on a safe hit by Rose. During the remainder of the game Brown failed to score. For Princeton, Duffield made a run in the sixth inning, reaching first on a safe hit, stealing second, and scoring through the errors of S. Greene. In the seventh inning, Loney reached first, stole second and went to third on a passed ball; then Winton's safe hit to centre field allowed him to score.

At the end of the fifth inning of the Amherst game, the score stood 5-0, in favor of Amherst. But this was the turning point of the game. Before the sixth inning closed, by a fortunate succession of base hits, and of errors by Amherst, Princeton tied the score. In the seventh, Duffield fouled out, Loney reached second by errors. McCune did likewise and Loney came home. Another error brought McCune in and gave Schenck first. Harlan made a safe hit to third and Winton followed with a two-base hit to left field allowing Harlan and Schenck to score. Archer repeated Winton's performance, bringing Winton home. He then stole third and came in on an error. In the eighth inning, Loney made a fine double play, catching Robinson's hot liner, and returning it to first in time to shut out Arnd. Despite a change of Amherst pitchers, Princeton secured two more runs.

On June 1, Yale came to Princeton and was defeated by the score of 7-6. Princeton scored one run in the first inning; Duffield secured first on an error, and reached second on a passed ball. Then Wadleigh hit to second base and was thrown out at first, while Duffield went to third. Loney knocked a fly to Watson, who, on a wild throw to Ives, permitted Duffield to come home. In the second inning, Watson took first base on Loney's error, and made second, third and home on Hopkins' and Badger's hits. Ives made a two base hit which brought Badger home. Lamb opened the next inning with a base hit, and a series of Princeton errors gave Yale three runs. In the fourth inning, Hutchison scored the last run for Yale by making a home run. Then Princeton began to play a steadier, uphill game; they were becoming accustomed to Hutchison's pitching and bunched their hits; while Archer's effectiveness in the box increased with each inning. In the last half of the fourth inning, McCune went to base on balls; Schenck hit to shortstop and made first on an error, while McCune succeeded in reaching third base. At this critical point, Archer came to the bat and made a safe hit, that allowed McCune and Schenck to score. No more runs were scored until the last half of the seventh inning. Then after three strikes, Winton secured first base on Ives' passed ball, and scored on several other passed balls. Rafferty took his base on balls and scored on a three base hit by Wadleigh. In the eighth inning, not a Yale man reached first base. For Princeton, McCune knocked a foul to first and Schenck was assisted out at first by Walden. Then Harlan made a three base hit to left field and was brought home by Winton's hit to right field. Winton took second on Watson's error, and scored by a base hit from Archer.

On June 4, Princeton defeated Brown at Providence. Princeton scored two runs in the first inning; Wadleigh made a safe hit and reached second on Gladding's wild throw to second base of Loney's grounder. McCune struck out, and Wadleigh and Loney scored on Schenck's safe hit. In the third inning, Duffield reached third on Ditts' wild throw to first base, and scored on Wadleigh's hit. Two stolen bases and a sacrifice hit by McCune, sent Wadleigh home. In the fourth inning, Princeton made three earned runs, on single hits by Harlan, Winton and Duffield, and a two base hit by Archer. Brown scored its first run when Rose made a safe hit, went to second on a passed ball, to third on a wild pitch and scored on Ladd's hit. The next three innings were blanks for both sides. In the eighth inning, Harlan scored the last run for Princeton on an error by Doron, a steal, a safe hit, and a wild throw to pitcher. Brown made two runs on McCune's excusable muff of Doron's fly, Ditts' two base hit, and S. Greene's single hit. In the ninth inning, J. Greene scored on a two base hit, a sacrifice hit, and Winton's wild throw to Harlan.

On June 6, Princeton defeated Harvard at Cambridge in an exciting game of ten innings. The umpire was entirely incompetent, but the audience was impartial and appreciative. In the first inning, Harvard scored two runs; Olmsted and Nichols hit safely, Baker was given his base on balls, and Edwards knocked a safe hit which brought Olmsted and Nichols home. Baker was put out at home, while Edwards was taking second base by Schenck's feint to Rafferty and Rafferty's return to Schenck. Harvard failed to score again until the seventh inning. In the second inning, Schenck reached first base on Baker's muff, and went home on Harlan's base hit to right field which Edwards did not stop. Harlan reached third and came home on a wild pitch. In the fourth inning, Harlan scored again on a base hit, two passed balls, and Winton's base hit. In Harvard's fifth inning, five men reached first base, but fine playing by Princeton shut them out without a run. In the sixth inning, Wadleigh made a three-base hit and scored an earned run on Loney's sacrifice hit. Harvard's seventh inning was very disastrous to Princeton. Coolidge went to first base on the umpire's error, who refused to change his decision, though requested by both sides. Olmsted reached first on Harlan's fumble, and Coolidge took second. Nichols followed with a three-base hit, bring in two runs, and subsequently scoring on a sacrifice hit by Edwards. This was the last run that Harvard made, although later four men reached first base; but steady playing all around, effective pitching and marvellous catching by Schenck, prevented their scoring. In the ninth inning, Loney tied the score by a safe hit, a passed ball, and Snow's error on Schenck's grounder. Excitement was at fever heat when Harvard came to the bat in the tenth inning. Archer was equal to the emergency, retiring Burt and Snow on strikes; while Coolidge fled out to Schenck. Archer was the first Princeton man at the bat and he made a good base hit. Then he advanced to second on a passed ball, to third on Rafferty's sacrifice hit, and scored the winning run on a ball which had struck the catcher's foot and rolled a few feet towards right field.

For the exhibition game on the following day, both nines played with substitute batteries and the players seemed to have lost the vim of the previous day.

At the winter meeting of the American College Baseball Association, the subject of eligibility was discussed at great length, for already it was rumored that certain colleges did not shrink from offering financial inducements to promising players; and the following rule was adopted. "Any student who had been pursuing a course of study through the entire collegiate year and whose college expenses are in no way borne by any man connected with baseball interests shall be eligible for the college nine. Any student who shall play on a professional ball nine and receive pay therefor shall not be eligible."

After eleven games with professional and semi-professional teams, Princeton played the first championship game against Amherst, on May 13. Taylor got his base on balls. Savage followed with a three-base hit, bringing Taylor home. Savage scored on Arnd's sacrifice hit. Princeton's first run was scored by Wadleigh, who reached first base on balls, and scored on two passed balls and Harlan's hit. In the third inning, Harlan hit safely and came home on errors. In the sixth inning, Savage scored on a three-base hit and Ernst's wild throw. Hits by Harris and Clark, combined with good base running and hits by Wilson, Schenck and Wadleigh brought in five runs. The seventh inning proved fatal for Princeton. Errors by Ernst and Wilson and two passed balls, supplemented by hits of Hamlin, Taylor, Arnd and Gardner, resulted in five runs for Amherst. The game was called in the middle of the eighth inning on account of rain, with the score 7-8, in Amherst's favor.

Princeton won the first Dartmouth game, on May 15. Wadleigh made a safe hit and scored on errors; Harris and Clark got to first base on balls and errors allowed them to score. In the second inning, Dartmouth scored when Coombs took first on Rafferty's error, stole second and came home on Schenck's overthrow. Dartmouth scored again in the fourth inning, and in the sixth, safe hits by Parker, Cushman and Webster gave Dartmouth its last two runs. In the eighth inning, with no one out and bases full, Clark cut off a run by a well directed throw to home plate, after a good running catch. Under similar circumstances, Harlan, Rafferty and Larkin closed the inning by a finely executed double play. Harris made the last run for Princeton on an error by Matthewson and two passed balls.

Olmsted opened the first Harvard game on May 19, by knocking a fly, which Larkin muffed. Olmsted went to third on Nichols' hit and scored on a wild pitch. For Princeton, hits by Wadleigh and Harlan, with splendid base running, yielded three runs. In the third inning, a two-base hit by Wadleigh and three consecutive errors by Burt added four runs. In the fourth inning, Harvard had two men on bases, but Bean retired the side by striking out. In the fifth inning, Coolidge made a clean home run on a beautiful line hit to left centre field. In the sixth, Hall reached first on Wilson's error, Bean on balls and LeMoynes on Harlan's fumble. The next man getting first on balls, Hall was forced home. For Princeton, Larkin reaching first on a hit, was brought home in the same way. In the eighth, Bean missed the third strike, and Schenck threw to second where Rafferty put Nichols out and returned the ball to first in time to catch Bean. Harris hit safely and scored an earned run on Harlan's hit. In the ninth inning, LeMoynes scored Harvard's fourth and last run on a hit, two errors and a balk. There was no inning when some Princeton man did not reach first base.

Princeton, by bunching their hits in the second inning, made three runs. In the sixth inning, Princeton had a "streak of tremendous batting" and six hits, with the errors of Boyden, gave them three earned and four unearned runs. In the eighth inning, Harlan's error and a two and a three base hit gave Amherst two runs.

Brown won the game on May 27. The first Princeton man at the bat was Wadleigh; he knocked a two base hit and scored when Larkin knocked another two base hit. Later Harris came home on a sacrifice hit. Brown made six runs in the third inning by good batting, but in the seventh not a Brown man reached first base—not a strike, not a ball was called. In the eighth inning, Princeton tied the score, but Brown straightway took a big lead again, by hard batting and Princeton errors.

Yale won the game on May 30, by the superior play of its battery, Hubbard's catching being remarkably good. In other respects Princeton's fielding was superior. In the first inning, Wadleigh reached second, but there he was left. Camp hit the first ball thrown to a Yale man for a home run. Platt followed with a three-base hit, but was fielded out at home. Badger scored on a hit and errors. In the second inning, Rafferty came all the way round on an overthrow by Platt. Jones and Hubbard scored on errors, and Camp made a second home run. In the third inning, a base on balls and hits by Larkin and Rafferty gave Princeton two runs, while Yale was blanked—the only time in the game. With two men out in the fourth inning, a base on balls and errors by H. Hopkins and Jones gave Princeton another run. In the fifth inning, Yale made four runs, the last by Smith's two base hit and a blocked ball. In the sixth inning, Princeton made two runs on S. Hopkins error, Ernst's two-bagger, a passed ball and a sacrifice hit. In the seventh inning, Harlan scored on a hit and Camp's overthrow, which allowed Rafferty also to score. In the ninth inning, when two men were out, Schenck made a two base hit and Wilson followed with a single. They were left on bases, because Ernst's fly to centre field was easily caught.

In the first inning of the Harvard game, on June 3, Wadleigh's error and Olmstead's hit gave Harvard two runs. In the second, Princeton scored on Barker's error and Moffat's two base hit. Harvard made its last run on hits by Hall, Burt and LeMoyné. For the rest of the game Princeton's fielding was perfect, not another Harvard man reaching second. In the third, Wadleigh's three base hit and Larkin's single hit earned a run, Larkin and Harris also scoring. Princeton's last two runs were made in the ninth on Ernst's two-base hit, a base on balls and a wild pitch. The exhibition game, on June 5, was won by Harvard.

The Yale game on June 24 opened in a very brilliant manner, as the first striker—Camp—went out on a very difficult fly to Rafferty. Platt made a base hit to centre field, went to second on an error by Schenck and scored on Hopkins' hit to left field. The latter, after reaching third base, was left there, as the next two strikers—Badger and Smith—each went out on a fly to Moffat in left field. Then Princeton went to the bat and took the lead by scoring three unearned runs. Wadleigh and Larkin, the two first strikers, secured their bases on called balls. The latter was forced out at second by Harris, and the former scored through an error of Jones. Harris was put out while trying to reach the home plate, and both Harlan and Rafferty who secured their bases on forced balls, reached home when Ernst made a neat base hit. Ernst ended the inning, as he was forced out at second by Wilson. In the second and third innings, both nines disposed of their opponents in one, two, three order, much to the satisfaction of the lookers-on, who heartily applauded the clever fielding of the collegians. It the fourth inning, Yale pounded the pitching of Ernst unmercifully, and gained five runs, all of them being earned. This made the score stand 6-3 in their favor. This lead they maintained until the sixth inning, when Princeton once more took the lead by scoring five runs (two earned). In this inning, Princeton did some very good work at the bat, as they bunched their hits, making six of the seven base hits with which they were credited. Yale was unable to bat the pitching of Moffat to any advantage, and the final score was 8-7 in favor of Princeton.

In the deciding game with Yale, on June 27, Camp led off with a three-base hit, which was followed by two singles and another three-base hit. The substitution of Moffat for Ernst stopped Yale's heavy hitting for a while, but it was too late. Princeton scored two runs in the third inning on Wadleigh's hit and Badger's error. A base on balls and Hopkins' hit gave one run to Yale, and on the next inning four more runs were added to Yale's score. In the seventh inning, singles by Ernst, Schenck, Wadleigh and Larkin earned three runs, and somewhat raised the hopes of Princeton's supporters. "Moffat, whose pitching in the last part of the recent game greatly bothered the Yale batters, was easily hit to-day. It was discovered that he could not pitch effectually a low ball, and strikers who ordinarily call for a high ball asked for low balls to-day, and batted him all over the field."

The management of the baseball team was very much worried in the spring of 1883 when the Faculty passed resolutions limiting the absences of the team to five days per term, and prohibiting practice with professional teams, whether in or out of town. The five day limit would prevent the team from playing any practice games out of town, and consequently many good amateur clubs would not come here because Princeton could not play a return game. The management felt that they ought to be allowed to hire professionals to come here to play for practise. But the Faculty maintained that the morals and customs of the students were corrupted by games with professionals, not to speak of the time consumed in such games.

Captain Harlan writes: "When the rule was passed forbidding play with professionals, I indulged in a diplomatic manoeuvre, which was entirely successful. After some correspondence, I got hold of a baseball nine out of a patent pill manufactory in New Jersey. They were non-professionals, and on the whole, were fairly decent fellows. I told the captain just before the game started of our troubles arising out of the rule against professional games, and that I desired him and his men to make a suitable demonstration, explaining to him the thought I had in mind. I had previously sent complimentary tickets to the Faculty, telling them that I had succeeded in getting a non-professional nine for a practice game. Many of the Faculty came. I presume they never saw such an exhibition of ruffianism as those good fellows gave us. The pitcher came out in a red undershirt, and with one shoe off; and the way they howled and quarreled among themselves, and with the umpire, and with me, was astonishing. The result was so convincing that when I appeared at the next Faculty meeting, with a copy of the rules adopted by the professional league, parts of which forbidding swearing, card playing, gambling, and boisterous conduct, etc., I carefully read, the Faculty unanimously rescinded the rule made a few weeks before. The result was that practice games with professionals again became possible, and Princeton made an excellent record for the season.

The Harvard game of May 18, was the first championship game of the season. Princeton's lead was lost, and retaken again, in the last inning. Harvard, in contrast to Princeton, played an almost faultless fielding game, but her few errors, being at critical moments, were costly. At different times she had the bases full, but was prevented from scoring by Moffat's effective pitching and Clark's perfect fielding. In the first inning, Wilson reached first base on a base hit, stole second. Clark made another single hit, and Wilson and Clark scored on two errors of Smith. In the third inning, Wadleigh made a three base hit, and scored an earned run on Wilson's high fly to centre field. Harvard made her first run in the fifth inning, when LeMoyné made a two base hit and scored on Baker's single and Edward's underthrow to the home plate. In the seventh inning, Wilson misjudged Le Moyné's fly and the latter scored on errors by Antrim and Harlan, '83. At the beginning of the ninth inning, Princeton became demoralized, although the score was 3-2 in her favor. Beaman reached first on an error of Harlan, '83, and scored on single hits by Keen and Coolidge. Baker's two base hit brought Keep in and advanced Coolidge to third base. Smith took first on balls, thus filling the bases. Wilson cleanly stopped Lovering's hit to short, but hesitating too long, allowed Coolidge to run home and Lovering to reach first. Again fine playing at a critical moment saved the game for Princeton. Nichols went out on a fly to Edwards. Clark caught Allen out on a high fly and at once, by a long and accurate throw to Harlan, '84, cut Baker off at home. In Princeton's half Wilson reached first on a single hit and stole second base. Clark was declared safe at first by Smith's catching the ball off the base. A passed ball sent Wilson to third and Clark to second. Harlan, '83, by a single hit, brought Clark and Wilson home. He stole second and reached third on a passed ball. Moffat struck out. Harlan, '84, made a single hit to left field and brought home his brother for the winning run.

In the first inning of the second Amherst game, at Princeton, Wilson made a three base hit and scored on a passed ball. But Amherst scored three runs the same inning. Taylor made a single hit, reached second on a fumble by Clark. Hunt reached first on Edward's error. Stuart made a single hit, Kimball did the same, bringing two runs in. Then Stuart stole home. In the third inning, Antrim made first base on an error and stole home. In the sixth, Clark reached first on a single, stole second and came home on J. M. Harlan's single hit. In the eighth inning, with two men out, Edwards dropped a ball at first base, and before the side was retired, Amherst had scored the winning run. In the beginning of the ninth inning, when two men were out for Princeton, Edwards came to the bat, anxious to retrieve his error; he succeeded in making a safe hit. Then Antrim reached first on balls, but the Princeton hopes were blasted by Wilson, the next batter, who struck out and retired the side.

The Brown game of May 26 was ten innings long. Princeton deserved the game, by out-batting and out-fielding her opponents, and won it in the last innings by well placed hits and Brown's costly errors. The score was kept close by Brown's bunching her hits effectually, and profiting by critical misplays. In the ninth inning, Princeton tied the score. Harlan, '83, reached first on error of shortstop and came home on a wild throw of catcher, the ball bounding over centre fielder's head. Wadleigh went to first base on balls and second on a passed ball. Smith had a chance to put the third man out by catching Shaw's high fly to right field, but he slipped, fell and dropped the ball, allowing Wadleigh to tie the score. The winning run was made in the tenth inning. Edwards hit safely, reached second on Wilson's single hit, and third on centre fielder's muff of Clark's fly. Harlan, '83, hit a sharp grounder to Shedd, a fumble of which allowed Edwards to make the winning run.

Princeton won the exhibition game also, on May 28, by the score of 12-11.

About two thousand people witnessed the Yale game on May 30, in New York. Princeton clearly outfielded and outbatted Yale, but her errors of judgment and actual errors being at critical moments, gave Yale the winning run. Moffat pitched a remarkably effective game, striking out eight men and being successful twice in putting men out by quick throws to first base. Harlan, '84, gave him his usual sure support behind the bat and with him played an almost perfect game. Yale was unable to secure many hits off Moffat and was weak in base running. In the fifth inning, Souther led off with a three base hit. Carpenter was safe at first by an error of Harlan, '83. Hubbard knocked a swift fly to right, which Shaw muffed, allowing Souther to score. Griggs struck out, Hopkins made a hit, Edwards fielded him out, but allowed Carpenter to score. An error of Edwards allowed Hubbard to run in, and Jones to reach first in safety, but he was caught napping at first by Moffat. In the seventh inning, Harlan, '84, reached first on three strikes, and Shaw followed him on a bad throw. Edwards made a neat single hit. Wilson followed with another which sent in three runs. It looked as if Princeton would tie the score when Shaw scored the fourth run in the ninth inning, but Antrim played too far off second and was caught napping.

On June 1, Princeton expected to play the second championship game with Harvard, but unfortunately their suits could not be found. Their baggage, owing to a bad blunder, had been left behind in New York. No nine can play well in borrowed suits and shoes. This was especially true of the Princeton nine, for several of the players were lame and required their own shoes in order to play their best. That, however, was not Harvard's fault. She was ready to play, and offered to supply the Princeton men with suits and shoes, and a strict construction of the rules after the manner of professionals would have required Princeton to play the game at the appointed time in the best way they could, or forfeit it. The Princeton captain knew the blunder was theirs, and made no excuse for it. They had no legal right to ask any favors; but as soon as the case was put before the Harvard president and captain although they would have been justified in forcing them to play, yet, knowing that with this handicap against Princeton, such a game would be no test of the comparative merits of the two nines, they magnanimously agreed to call the Friday game the exhibition game and play the championship game on Saturday. Some college nines would have insisted on the strict application of the professional rule. Princeton appreciated very deeply this courteous treatment on the part of Harvard. "Such actions go far toward rescuing college sports, which should be carried on in a high and gentlemanly spirit, from the tricky professional atmosphere which too often surrounds them."

In the first inning of the championship game, Coolidge made a single hit, went to third base on Moffat's wild throw to Edwards and scored on Baker's hit. Moffat put the next three batters out easily, Smith to centre field, Lovering and Nichols on strikes. In the fourth inning, Clark tied the score by knocking a home run. In the sixth inning, Wilson took first on Coolidge's error and scored on a safe hit by Harlan, '83. Moffat stole second and third bases and scored an earned run on Wadleigh's hit. Then Wadleigh scored on a wild pitch and Nichols error. In the same inning, Nichols made a home run for Harvard. With Brown, on June 4, Princeton played the best fielding game of the year, the batting being steady and strong also. Moffat pitched a beautiful game, Brown making only three safe hits. John Harlan's catching was perfect, his throwing being accurate and much quicker than usual. Brown secured her only run in the first inning by Bassett's two-base hit and Edwards' error. In the second, Princeton took the lead by scoring two runs on two hits and three errors. From this point on Princeton increased her score through the game, getting men on bases in every inning.

Princeton defeated Yale, on June 23, in the deciding game that lasted ten innings. In the first inning, Wilson hit to left field; a bad throw by Carpenter allowed him to reach third and he scored on Potter's hit. In the third inning, Edwards got to first by Terry's error. Moffat was sent to first on balls, which gave Edwards second. An error by Hopkins advanced him to third and he scored on Booth's wild pitch. In the next inning, Childs made a base hit and stole second. Booth followed with a hit to Wilson who overthrew first, letting in two runs. In the tenth inning, Moffat got first on balls, second on Wilson's hit and reached home for the winning run on J. S. Harlan's hit to left field.

The Faculty made another unsuccessful attempt to enforce the rules of last year regarding professional and out of town games. But a more serious burden was troubling the baseball management—they were in debt. Then, too, money was needed to put the grounds in proper shape. "The out field, perhaps, is good enough," says the Princetonian, "yet the diamond is scarcely fit for use. Every nine which visited it last year pronounced it one of the poorest they played on the whole season. It is full of hollows, which render it impossible to judge a grounder, and in which water and mud settle after every shower. The paths, around the bases particularly, need attention—to replace the stones and gravel by a little sand and tan-bark, that base running and sliding to the bases may be possible without physical injury."

A tour during the Easter recess had been planned, but this was a miserable failure because some of the clubs cancelled the dates, just before the team started. The Princetonian says: "This was owing rather to force of circumstances than bad management. The time, however, since the opening of the term, has hardly been used to best advantage. First, a mistake was made in allowing the team to disband. After spending more than a week in futile endeavor to meet some fitting antagonist, instead of then seeking practice with a picked nine here, or crossing bats with such professionals as were ready and willing to play on our grounds, four of the strongest members ignored this necessity and found business of such an urgent nature elsewhere that they did not reach town till several days after the term had begun. Practice, thorough and constant, is what the team needs and must have. Our rivals in the championship evidently appreciate this, and have made every effort to secure the same. Yale, for example, has played eight games, making very creditable scores with clubs of high standing, while Amherst, whom we meet on May 10, at Amherst, where we have never yet beaten them, is not far behind in amount of work. In short, fine opportunities for essential work have slipped through our fingers, and now there must needs be careful management or the injury done can never be repaired. The college seems unanimous in the opinion that baseball does not mean Glee Club or anything else that will conflict with the real business in hand."

In the second inning of the Amherst game, on May 10, Amherst made three runs with three base hits. Then Princeton set to work in fine form, hitting hard and "blanking" Amherst till the tenth inning, when they scored another run. In the third inning, Princeton scored a single earned run on three base hits. Again in the fifth inning, A. Moffat made a two-base hit and scored on Harlan's single hit and the error of left fielder. In the seventh inning A. Moffat scored an earned run, stealing home very prettily while the catcher, Sullivan, stepped up to speak to the pitcher. This tied the score. In the eighth inning, the weak point of the Princeton nine (base running) came out; for Cooper and Shaw both made hits, but Cooper was put out at third where ordinary base running would have saved him, and in this inning, as well as in three others, Shaw was left on third by Van Etten's striking out. In the ninth inning, the game was almost in Princeton hands. W. Moffat made a two base hit and Harlan hit a ball past left fielder, which owing to the muddy ground did not roll. Moffat attempted to reach home but the left fielder threw the ball home in time to intercept him. In the tenth inning for Amherst, Stuart got safely to first by an overthrow of Cooper, reached third on errors, and scored on Buffum's hit.

On May 12, it took thirteen innings for Harvard to win. Princeton made her only runs in the second inning. Harlan reached first on balls, but was forced out by Toler's hit to Coolidge. Toler was forced out by Cooper. With two out Shaw made a single hit. Reynolds followed him with a hard hit grounder which the right fielder allowed to pass, letting Cooper and Shaw score. Van Etten's single and A. Moffat's two-base hit brought in two more runs. After this Princeton failed to score, all the base hits being scattered. Harvard played a steady uphill game. The tying run was made by Smith who took his base on balls and scored on Nichol's single hit. From the eighth to the thirteenth inning, the fielding and battery work of both nines was of a high order. With one man out in the thirteenth and Coolidge on third, Harlan overthrew to Van Etten and Coolidge scored the winning run.

In the Brown game, Princeton played with the substitute battery and was badly defeated. In the first inning, W. Moffat reached third by Doron's overthrow. In the second inning, Van Etten and Dickey made single hits. A. Moffat's single hit forced Van Etten out at third; Shaw's hit brought Dickey home. Then on a hard hit by W. Moffat, A. Moffat and Shaw scored. In the fourth inning, Edwards scored on errors and Van Etten's hit. The score now stood 5-0; but Princeton did not make another run. Before the fourth inning closed, Brown scored an earned run on Bassett's two base hit and Chase's single. In the fifth inning, they scored four runs, of which two were earned; and three runs in the seventh inning on battery errors. In the eight, by errors and base hits, Brown added two more runs, and the final score in favor of Brown was 10-5.

Princeton won from Dartmouth the first championship game on the home grounds. In the first inning, Princeton by a streak of good batting scored nine runs. A. Moffat led off with a two base hit; Shaw went out on a foul tip; W. Moffat was given his base on balls, and the Moffats scored on Reynold's single hit. Errors and a single hit by Van Ausdal allowed Harlan, Cooper and Edwards to score. Van Etten and A. Moffat scored on Shaw's two base hit. Neither nine scored again until the fourth inning, when Hale made the first run for Dartmouth on a hit and two passed balls. Princeton now seemed unable to bat Nettleton's pitching, except for long foul and fair flies, which, aided by the wind, Springfield and Fellows constantly captured. W. Moffat made a three base hit in the seventh inning and scored on an error. In the eighth, Van Ausdal scored the last Princeton run on two single hits. Dartmouth made her last run also in this inning.

The second championship game with Dartmouth was played on the following day, and resulted in another victory for the visitors. Dartmouth outbatted Princeton slightly; her fielding was not as steady, but every error of the Princeton nine yielded a run for Dartmouth. In the first inning, Hale's three base hit brought in Springfield, and Hale scored on a passed ball. In the second inning, Princeton made three runs on the single hits of Shaw, Cooper and Van Ausdal and A. Moffat's sacrifice hit to centre. Dartmouth scored on the single hits of Null and Nettleton; and again in the third on Springfield's two base hit and Chellis' single. Princeton was unable to increase her score, while Dartmouth added one in the fourth and another in the eighth inning, making the final score 3-6, in favor of Dartmouth.

In the game with Harvard, on May 24, the nine reached the lowest possible place, and the College had the slight consolation of knowing that it had seen the worst. A. Moffat's illness rendered it necessary to put Edwards in the box—a change which greatly disturbed the in-field. W. Moffat was disabled in the fifth inning, and Larkin was put on first, playing a good game to the end. The soreness of Harlan's hands rendered it impossible for him to recover himself in time to catch men running down to second. Consequently Shaw was put behind the bat after the fifth inning. The batting was the poorest of the season, only two single hits off Nichols. In the first inning, Harvard secured four runs. Coolidge was the first to come in on a muff by Toler and a passed ball. Phillips and LeMoynes got first on balls, and were brought home on a base hit by Allen who scored on passed balls. In the fourth, Reynolds made the first run for Princeton, getting first and third bases on passed balls and scoring on Van Ausdal's hit. In the fifth three singles yielded three runs for Harvard. Toler made the second run for Princeton, getting first on an error of Baker and the other bases on a wild pitch, an error of Crocker and a passed ball. Shaw made the last run for Princeton on errors.

The Yale game of May 30, is called "Princeton's Waterloo" for since the establishment of the Intercollegiate Association, Princeton had never been so badly defeated by Yale as by this score of 16-3. Princeton was still experimenting with the team. In this game Bickham was put in left field, and the third catcher of the season, Van Etten, put behind the bat. The opening of the game promised a close contest, for neither side scored until the second inning. In the second inning, Stuart reached first on Harlan's fumble and came home on Brigham's two base hit. But in the third inning, all doubts as to the ultimate results were set at rest, as the Yale team was liberally treated to a gift of half a dozen unearned runs, and then with the game in their hands they began to play ball up to quite a professional standpoint. In the sixth inning, Moffat got first base on a hit, took second on McKee's error, and scored on Reynolds' hit. Reynolds and Harlan both made unearned runs in the ninth inning, but the final score was 16-3 in Yale's favor.

Princeton lost the second Brown game, on June 4. Brown made three runs in the first inning, aided by Cooper's slow throws to first base. But by careful playing Princeton blanked the visitors for the next six innings, allowing only two men to reach first base, one of whom, Gunderson, was thrown out on first on Moffat's double play. Princeton made two hits in the fourth inning, but failed to score. In the fifth inning, Moffat scored on his single hit, and on errors. In the next inning, Cooper reached third on a three base hit and was brought in by Edwards' single. Edwards scored on Van Etten's hit. In the eighth, Brown scored two runs on two singles and on errors, making the final score 3-5 in their favor.

In the Amherst game, Princeton played very steadily and raised the despondent hopes of their supporters. Princeton took the field, and having blanked Amherst in the first inning, took the lead from the start, for the Amherst fielders made frequent errors in fielding the hot grounders knocked to them. By the end of the fourth inning the score stood 4-0. Amherst then seemed to brace, securing one run each in the fifth and sixth innings. Each nine scored in the eighth inning, but Amherst failed to score in the ninth, and the final score stood 6-3 in favor of Princeton.

The final game of the Yale series was played in New York and won by Yale, 9-0. It was a one-sided and very uninteresting contest, and even the players themselves did not seem to show much vim after the first two innings. Princeton was overmatched and after Yale had virtually won the game at the very start, both nines became indifferent and rather hurried through the contest. Moffat pitched very well but was poorly supported. Yale secured a lead in the first two innings, and in the last two, Princeton went to pieces and Yale scored four more runs. Princeton's batting was extremely weak and the fielding frequently very loose; while Yale played a steady game throughout, though not one of their runs was earned.

Under the old management the Association sustained a debt of $600, but with the new system the managers were able to close the year with a small surplus, the receipts being $2,869.17 and the expenditures $2,867.25.

The great event of the year was the adoption of a new Base Ball Constitution, providing for a Graduate Advisory Committee, which is fully described on the article on "The Princeton System of Athletic Management." (See page 53.)

It was very difficult to arrange a series of games during the spring vacation and everyone felt disheartened. The only promising feature was that the men showed a laudable ambition not to play for individual records. There was an exception to the usual dullness, in the game of May 6, against the Quaker City Club, of Philadelphia, for Bickham struck out nineteen men during the game and this record has never been surpassed by a Princeton pitcher.

Earned Runs, P. 1, Y. 1. 3 Base Hits Blossom. Wild Pitch, Willet 2. Passed Balls, Shaw 3. Time, 3 hours and 25 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Wyckoff.

Princeton lost the first Yale game, on May 9. In the first inning, Bremner batted a swift ball to Edwards, reached first on his error, stole second and third bases, and then came home on a sacrifice hit. The next batter was Lyon, the man who had knocked the first home run of the season in the college championship series; but Bickham struck him out. In the Princeton half of the inning, with two men out, Shaw made a safe hit, stole second, went to third on Van Ausdal's safe hit and scored on a poorly fielded ball from Edwards' bat. In the second inning, Yale scored one run by a lucky bunching of scratch hits, and these were their only hits during the game. From this inning on, the ball was scarcely touched and nine men had three strikes called on them. In the fifth inning, Bremner hit to second base and on a wild throw of Edwards went to second base. Then he scored Merrill's safe hit. But Princeton tied the score. Toler went to first base on a fumble by short stop and came home on Blossom's three base hit. Blossom scored on a sacrifice hit of Van Ausdal. In the seventh inning, Terry secured his first base on Shaw's muff of a third strike. With two men out the prospects for retiring Yale without scoring were very bright. But by an error of judgment Shaw threw the ball to third base in an attempt to catch Terry off his base. The throw was wild, and Blossom missed the ball. Cooper picked it up and threw it to the home plate towards which Terry was running. The ball struck Terry on the leg and glanced off into the crowd. Bickham was unable to find the ball among the crowd and consequently Bremner was allowed to score another run. In the last half of the ninth inning, Blossom made a single hit, but the next man at the bat was thrown out at first and the side retired. The battery work was excellent. Bickham struck out fourteen men, but two of them reach first base because Shaw was unable to hold the ball. The success of Yale was attributable more to their base running than to any other feature of their play or to Princeton's weakness.

The Brown game of May 11, emphasized Princeton's strength in the pitcher's box and weakness in base running. In the first three innings of the game, Bickham struck out six of the nine men at the bat. In the fourth inning, the audience started in to rattle Bickham. And Brown assisted by three hits, two bases on balls, and five errors scored five runs, the score standing 4-5 in Brown's favor. In the sixth inning, Reynolds made a two base hit which stuck in the mud, and scored on Toler's hit. Before the inning closed, Princeton made two more runs. In the eighth, by good batting, Princeton made four runs.

The game with Amherst on May 13, was very uninteresting despite the score, for the many loose errors robbed it of the snap and spirit that should characterize a good college game. In the second inning, Blossom threw ten feet over Toler's head and allowed two runs to be scored. In the eighth and ninth innings, Bickham quickly retired the batters. The last of the eighth inning saw Princeton tie the score, making two runs by base hits and the errors of Stearns. In the ninth inning, Toler reached first base on the error of second and scored on the long fly of Blossom.

Princeton won the return game with Brown by the score of 14-3. In the first inning Toler scored on a base hit, two steals and a passed ball. Blossom was given his base on balls and came in when Rhett fumbled Shaw's long fly. By an erroneous decision of the umpire, Van Ausdal was put out at first base, while Shaw scored. In the second inning, Brown scored her first run by a base on balls and a wild pitch. In the fourth inning, Bickham knocked a home run, and Brown scored one run on a base hit and passed ball. In the fifth, Wadsworth made a base hit but was thrown out at home by Blossom, while Chase took first on the sacrifice hit. Seagrave made a two base hit and brought Chase home. In the next inning, Edwards scored another run for Princeton on Gunderson's error and Cooper's base hit. Five base hits and two errors gave Princeton seven runs in the seventh inning, one of which was a home run by Blossom. In the ninth inning, Edwards made a base hit and scored on Cooper's hit. Cooper stole second and third bases by beautiful dives, and scored on Cooper's error. In the last inning for Brown, Rhett was out from second to first. Gunderson took his base on a muffed third strike; Clark hit a hot ball to Cooper who trapped it finely, and forced out Gunderson at second with assist to Edwards, who in turn threw Clark out at first.

Harvard won the exhibition game on May 22, by the score of 5-6, and also the championship game on the following day, chiefly through Princeton errors. There were only two men on the Princeton team that did not make some errors. Shaw's throws were especially disastrous; Harvard did not attempt to run bases but waited until a passed ball allowed them to trot home. Shaw was unable to hold Bickham because of his painfully sore hands. In the first inning, Beaman scored on a base hit and a passed ball; Tilden on a muffed third strike and a passed ball. For Princeton, Van Ausdal got his base on balls, went to second on a balk by Nichols and scored on a wild pitch. In the second inning, Princeton scored three runs. Blossom made a three base hit and came home on Cooper's hit; Cooper stole second and scored on Reynolds's hit. Bickham was put out at first while Reynolds scored. In the fourth inning, Willard scored on a base on balls and a passed ball. In the sixth inning, Nichols went to first base on an error and scored on Willard's two base hit. In the seventh inning, Foster went to first on an error and scored on Winslow's two base hit; Winslow scored on Beaman's hit and a home run by Tilden brought Beaman in; Allen made a hit and scored on passed balls. For Princeton, Reynolds made a base hit and came home on a wild throw. In the eighth inning, Foster scored on a muffed third strike and a passed ball. In the last inning, Harvard scored five runs. Nichols reached first on a muffed third strike and home on a passed ball. Willard went to second on an error and scored on Allen's hit; the latter came home on passed balls. Smith was sent to first on balls and scored on Wiestling's hit; the latter came home on a wild throw.

On June 1, Harvard again defeated Princeton in a game very similar to that of May 23. Bickman was unable to use his wrist and Edwards pitched. In the fifth inning, Blossom who had been catching, hurt his hand badly, (we must remember that there were no padded mitts at this time), and Shaw was forced to take his place.

The team showed up much better in the game of June 6, when they defeated Yale. Bickham was in the best of trim and his swift delivery puzzled Yale as much in the ninth inning as in the first inning. Princeton's base running was the feature of the game—even the errors did not spoil it. In the first inning, two overthrows and a safe hit by Edwards allowed Van Ausdal to score. Edwards stole second and third bases and scored on an error by Stagg. In the third inning, a three base hit and an overthrow brought Shaw home. The sixth inning almost proved fatal for Princeton. Yale, by two hits and the Princeton errors, made three runs. However, Bickham kept cool and struck out the last two men. In the seventh inning, Cooper knocked to Hickox and on a wild throw ran all the way around for a tally. In the eighth inning, Van Ausdal made a safe hit and Edwards, after two strikes, reached first base. Then Shaw knocked a home run and scored three runs. The last run was made by Reynolds on a hit and sharp base running.

In the Dartmouth game, of June 12, Cooper played an excellent game accepting seven out of eight chances. Van Ausdal caught in his left hand a fly, which bade fair to be a home run. In the second inning, Cooper made a hit, stole second by a beautiful slide, and scored on the pitcher's wild throw to third while Clark who got to first on an error, took third and scored on Van Ausdal's hit. In the eighth inning, Toler knocked a three base hit when the bases were filled. It was immediately followed by Van Ausdal's and Edwards' three base hits.

The two games which finally established Princeton's claim to the second place in the championship race were in every respect dissimilar. The first, with Amherst, was witnessed by few spectators and characterized by close playing, and lacked utterly in interest, except that it resulted in the first victory ever won by Princeton, at Amherst. The second, played at New Haven on Class Day, before two thousand spectators, was remarkable for loose playing, heavy hitting and intense excitement. This was the first time since 1881 that Princeton had played Yale, at New Haven. The week before, Yale had been defeated by Harvard and was consequently much dispirited. At critical moments, their lack of the necessary baseball snap proved fatal. At some points in the game both sides made brilliant plays but these were sadly alternated with errors and fumbles, passed balls and wild throws, and bad outfielding as well as poor work in the infield. Princeton's work was the more creditable and steady; her base running was exceptionally clean and rapid. Her batting was good, and this combined with Yale's poor fielding, made victory certain. Princeton took the lead in the first inning and held it throughout, though in the fourth inning the score stood only 6-5 in her favor.

The early games of the year were marked by the good fielding of the team, but developed the fact that in one vital position, the nine was weak, and further, that the nine were weak at the bat. During the month of April, nine games were played with professional or semi-professional teams and furnished excellent training.

Left on Bases P. 4, H. 7. 2 Base Hits, Blossom. Struck Out by Bickham 9, Nichols 7. Bases on Balls by Bickham 3. Passed Balls, Brownlee 2, Allen 2. Time, 2 hours, 30 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Donovan of Boston.

On May 22, both Harvard and Princeton appeared in their best form, and from start to finish showed that they were determined to play none but the best ball. At no time did any one get rattled on either team, and Princeton's victory was gained by merit alone. Twice Harvard had two men on second and third bases, but by the cool and proficient work of Bickham once, and Taylor again, they were prevented from scoring. In the fourth inning, with two men on bases, Harvard's strongest hitter, Nichols, came to the bat, but disappointed expectations by striking out. In the first inning, Bickham made a clean bit, took third on Reynolds' hit and scored on a wild throw. Reynolds stole bases very skilfully and came home on a passed ball. In the fifth, Larkin made a base hit, but hurt his ankle while stealing second. Blossom took his position on the base and scored for him on a hit and an error. In the end of the ninth inning, Henshaw went out by a grounder to Larkin. Ederly knocked the ball to Bickham, who threw it to Larkin, putting out Ederly.

Larkin quickly sent it to Brownlee, who cut off Foster at the home plate, in the only double play of the game, and ended the game.

Left on Bases P. 4, A. 2. 2 Base Hits, Shaw. Struck Out, by Bickham 8, Stuart 1. Bases on Balls, by Bickham 3, Stuart 1. Passed Balls, Brownlee 2, Alvard 1. Umpire, Mr. Donovan.

On May 26, Bickham held Amherst down to one base hit, but as the bases on balls will show, he had very little control over the ball; this was, however, occasioned by a split finger. In the first inning, Duffield took first base on balls, and was forced to second by Blossom who reached first also on balls. Then Bickham hit to Marble who threw wildly and allowed Duffield to score. In the eighth inning, by an error of left field, Duffield got to second base, advanced to third on Blossom's sacrifice hit, and scored on a passed ball. Bickham was sent to first on balls and scored on Shaw's hit.

The second game with Brown was won by Princeton, because in the first inning Princeton bunched her hits while Brown bunched her errors. Duffield reached first base on an error of the third baseman, Gunderson, who overthrew first base, permitting Blossom to reach it in safety and Duffield to go to second. Both men were advanced a base by a fumble of the third baseman and then both scored on Bickham's hit. In the sixth inning, Blossom reached first base by striking at a wild pitch for his third strike and scored when the shortstop was not able to handle Bickham's grounder.

The Harvard game of May 31 was one of the most stubbornly contested games ever played by college teams, lasting for fourteen innings of play, and three hours and a half of time. Princeton, though heavily handicapped, made a splendid uphill fight, and on many occasions lost control of the game by the sheerest hard luck. Princeton batted well, but Harvard fielded excellently. At the start, Bickham felt unwell, and as a consequence, Harvard in the first inning scored three runs on four clean hits. Two more runs were made in the third inning, and it looked like a "walk-over" for Harvard; Princeton had not yet scored a single run. Then Bickham began to feel better, and Princeton began to bat. In the fourth inning, Blossom made his second hit, went to second base on an error of Phillips, and then stole third base. Bickham was given his base on balls, Reynolds knocked a home run, and three runs were scored for Princeton. In the next inning, Hutchinson reached first base on Smith's error, stole second, went to third on Egerly's error, and came home on a wild pitch. In the sixth inning, Bickham knocked the second home run for Princeton, and the score stood 5-6. Harvard gained the lead in the seventh inning, but Princeton closed the gap in the ninth inning, when Harris reached third base by Phillips' wild throw, and scored on a passed ball. In the tenth inning, Harvard had men on both second and third bases, but they got no farther. In the thirteenth inning, Princeton's hopes ran high, when Bickham reached third base, but there he remained. In the fourteenth inning, Wiestling made a base hit, stole second base, advanced to third on a wild pitch, and scored the winning run on Smith's hit.

Princeton's chances for the championship were utterly destroyed in the Yale game, of June 2. The nine was crippled by the absence of Brownlee and Larkin, and showed evidences that they had not recovered from the strain of the fourteen inning game with Harvard. Bickham was suffering with a blistered finger, and of course, this diminished his speed, and lessened the range of his curves. Duffield was the first Princeton man at the bat, and after two strikes had been called on him, he knocked a clean home run. Blossom was given his first base on balls, stole second, and then scored on Shaw's sacrifice hit. In the third inning, Bickham made a hit, stole second, then third, and scored on a passed ball. In the fourth inning, Harris made a safe hit, was advanced to second by Taylor's hit, and both these men scored on Hutchinson's hit. In the seventh inning, King was given his base on balls, and scored on Duffield's two-base hit and an error of Winston, which allowed Duffield, also, to score. Blossom made a safe hit, stole second base, and reached third base on an error, and finally scored on Bickham's hit.

In the second Yale game, of June 5, Princeton's first battery was in no condition to play, for Bickham had a painfully sore finger, which largely accounted for the number of hits made by Yale. When Mercur went in to pitch in the fifth inning, the batting stopped, and only two hits were made off him. In the fourth inning, Brownlee's hands were so battered up that he had to retire. In the first inning, Yale secured four runs on Princeton's costly errors. In the second, hits by Marsh, Sheppard and Stewart, and Taylor's error added four more runs to the Yale score. In the third inning, Sheppard hit safely, and by the aid of Dann's two base hit, increased Yale's score to nine. Yale scored her last three runs in the sixth inning on a hit, two bases on balls, and an error. In the same inning, the first run for Princeton was made, when Blossom made a three base hit, and scored on Stagg's wild pitch.

Earned Runs, P. 1. Left on Bases, P. 5, A. 1. Double Play, Davidson-Belcher-Alvord. Struck Out by Bickham, 12, Stuart 3. Bases on Balls, by Stuart 3. Wild Pitch, Bickham. Passed Balls, Shaw. Total Strikes, on Bickham 58-18, Stuart 29-10. 1st Base on Errors, P. 8, A. 1. Time, 2 hours. Umpire, Mr. Dutton.

In the Amherst game, on June 7, Bickham pitched in his old form, and was ably supported by Shaw. Blossom made the play of the day, when, in backing up Bickham, he secured a hot liner, which Bickham had been unable to handle, and fielded it in time to prevent a hit. In the third inning, King went to first base on balls, stole second, and scored on the sacrifice hits of Mercur and Bickham. In the sixth inning, three runs were scored by Shaw, Harris and Hutchinson on a dropped fly, a base hit and two sacrifice hits. In the eighth inning, Princeton scored two more runs on a wild throw of Gates, a sacrifice hit, and the base hits of Taylor and King.

The first game with Williams was marked by heavy batting, and the second, by the absence of errors, as Princeton played without a single error, and Williams made only one. Bickham pitched with great effectiveness, and the play of Harris, at second base, was never surpassed by any Princeton second baseman, especially his handling of speedy grounders. But Princeton's base running was very poor. In two innings, she made five hits, but not a run.

A retrospect of the season shows that Princeton's failure to win the championship was due to the lack of a catcher, who could satisfactorily handle Bickham's almost phenomenally swift pitching, more than to any other reason.

Early in February, 1887, the death-knell of the old American College Baseball Association was sounded, and the Amherst, Brown, and Williams games were lowered from championship games to practice games, when the captains of the Yale, Harvard, and Princeton teams proposed a new agreement. Princeton desired a triangular league, rightly protesting that no fourth college should be admitted, unless it was either Amherst, Williams or Brown. As regards the admission of Columbia, the Princeton men could not see "how a college, which has never been a member of the Baseball League, and whose conduct in the Football Association was not creditable, should be given the preference over any one of the strongest nines in the old league if a fourth club is to be admitted." Harvard and Yale, however, favored the admission of Columbia, and Princeton waived her objection.

Each college was to play four games with each of the other clubs, two of which should be on the home grounds. The umpires were to be appointed by a Judiciary Committee composed of the captains, which also decided questions of eligibility, according to the following rule:

"Any student, who has been pursuing a course of study through the entire collegiate year and whose college expenses are in no way borne by men connected with baseball interests, shall be eligible for a college nine. Any student who shall play on a professional baseball team as a member thereof, or receive money therefor, shall not be eligible."

The season began on April 6, and, after five practice games, Princeton met Yale on April 30. The battery work was good for both nines, and the fielding very fine, until the ninth inning, when Yale seemed to loose confidence, and played loosely. In the second inning, Dann was given his base on balls, stole second, and came home on Spencer's base hit and Duffield's error. Kellogg opened the fourth inning with a three-base hit to left field. Then Dann was allowed to reach first, when Larkin attempted, but in vain, to throw Kellogg out at home. Princeton had not scored as yet, and inning after inning the side was retired without a run. The first two men at the bat in the ninth inning, Durell and Reynolds, were put out. Then the strong batter, Duffield, came to the plate, but not to hit. He waited until two strikes had been called on him, and then was given his base on balls. Soon he stole second, advanced to third on Dann's overthrow, and finally came home on an error of Cross. Wagenhurst was the next batter; he knocked a high fly to centre field, but Hunt and Kellogg collided in trying to catch it, and Wagenhurst ran for third. Here he would have been put out had not Hunt thrown over the baseman's head. Wagenhurst started for home, and was almost there, when Stagg touched him. At first, the umpire called it a "blocked" ball, and allowed the run, which tied the score. But later, he reversed his decision, when Captain Dann insisted that the ball was not dead, but in motion, when he picked it up.

The Harvard game of May 9 was less encouraging, for despite the small score, Princeton was weak in running bases, and fielding. No runs were made until the fifth inning, when Linn got his base on balls, advanced to second on a passed ball, and came home on Price's error. In the sixth inning, Campbell made a base hit, stole second and third, and came home on a sacrifice hit. In the latter half of this inning, Princeton made her only run. Durell had made a base hit, reached second and third on a passed ball, and came home on Reynolds' hit. In the seventh inning, King sent a high fly to Willard, which went through his hands, but Mumford caught the ball before it touched the ground. Harvard scored her last run in the eighth inning, then Campbell made a two-base hit to left field, advanced to third on Willard's sacrifice hit, and scored on a passed ball.

On May 21, Harvard defeated Princeton for the second time in a loosely played game, that resulted in the score of 18-11. There was, however, an improvement in base running, though the errors were almost as frequent as the hits. In the first inning, Harvard scored two runs on three hits and three stolen bases. For Princeton, Reynolds reached first base on Linn's error, stole second, and scored on Evan's sacrifice hit. In the second inning, each nine scored four runs. For Princeton, Mercur made a single hit, stole second, and came home on Wagenhurst's hit to centre field. An error by Wiestling gave Larkin first base, and allowed Wagenhurst to score. King took first on Boydén's overthrow, which allowed both Larkin and King to score. Harvard scored three runs in the third inning, on one hit, one error, two wild throws and three bases on balls. In the fourth inning, the Princeton nine became rattled. Two muffs gave Bingham and Evans their bases, and they scored on Mumford's hit. A base on balls, a single hit and an error gave Harvard another run and filled the bases. Then Willard knocked a two base hit and three men scored. Boydén scored the seventh run on two errors by Larkin. For Princeton, Brownlee was given his base on balls, took second and third, and came home on a wild pitch. King made a pretty single hit over second, stole second and scored on Reynolds' sacrifice hit. Harvard scored again in the sixth inning, when Campbell hit safely to centre field, stole second, took third base on Willard's fly to Evans, and stole home. In the seventh inning, Ford took first on Boydén's overthrow, second on a passed ball, and home on Campbell's wild throw. In the eighth, Harvard scored her last run; Wiestling reached first base on Price's fumble, stole second and came home on Willard's hit. For Princeton, Wagenhurst got his base on balls, stole second, took third base on a passed ball, and scored on Brownlee's hit. In the ninth inning, Mercur, made a beautiful three base hit, bringing in Ford and Evans; but the final score, in favor of Harvard, was 18-11.

On May 30, Princeton met Harvard in a ten inning game that Princeton won by the score of 11-10. In the first inning, Princeton scored six runs, five of which were earned on six hits and a base on balls. For Harvard, Wiestling made a home run. In the second inning, Boydén took first base on King's fumble, stole second and came home on Bingham's hit. Bingham advanced to third base on a wild pitch and scored on Mumford's grounder. In the third inning, Campbell made a hit, stole second, went to third base on Evans' muff of Willard's fly, and scored on Henshaw's hit, on which Willard took second base. Boyden knocked to King, who touched Henshaw and threw Boyden out at first base. In the fifth inning, Price made a hit, stole second, went to third on Reynolds' sacrifice hit, and scored on a wild pitch. Evans took first on Linn's fumble, stole second base and came home on a passed ball and a wild throw. Harvard tied the score by making four runs, on two single hits, a three base hit and a home run. In the seventh inning Price took first base on Mumford's fumble, went to third on Reynolds' hit, and reached home on Evans' sacrifice. Duffield took first on a muffed third strike, which allowed Reynolds to score. For Harvard, Henshaw went to first base on six balls, stole second, went to third on a passed ball, and scored on a wild pitch. In the ninth inning, Harvard tied the score again; Willard took first on balls, where Boyden took his place and stole second. Henshaw hit to Mercur, who threw to Larkin, putting the runner out before he was half way to first. Larkin held the ball, not risking the throw to third as Boyden ran down. Notwithstanding Henshaw had been put out, he ran on and deliberately kicked Larkin in the ankle. Larkin turned around and began a heated discussion, during which Boyden stole home. This was a regrettable bit of muckerism on Harvard's part. In the tenth inning, Wagenhurst made a hit, went to third base on Larkin's hit, and scored the winning run on Brownlee's hit.

The second Yale game was close and exciting up to the fifth inning, but then Yale's batting and Princeton's errors decided the game. Despite the evidence of the score, Princeton played fairly well, for two, at least, of her errors were excusable. Princeton could not hit Stagg. Yale, on the other hand, batted hard and bunched her hits most opportunely. In the second inning, Princeton had one man on third base, but there he remained. In the fifth inning, Stewart made the first base hit of the game over second base, which he reached on a passed ball. McClintock duplicated this hit and reached second on the attempt to cut off Stewart at home plate. King failed to secure Stagg's grounder past second base; Stagg stole second while the ball was in the pitcher's hands. Kellogg struck out. Noyes knocked a high fly, but neither King nor Evans were able to get under it, and Stewart scored. King and Larkin attempted to catch Noyes off first base, but this only allowed Stagg to score, for Noyes gained first base on King's throw to Brownlee. In the confusion McClintock scored. Hunt waited for balls and was sent to first base. Then a change was made and King went into the pitcher's box, while Mercur went to left field, and the scoring ended for that inning. But it began again in the next inning, when Spencer got to first on balls, and had barely stolen second, when six balls sent Stewart to first. Then McClintock struck out on the first three balls pitched. Stagg knocked a fly to left field, but Mercur muffed it, and Spencer scored, while Stewart went to second. He and Stagg were each advanced a base on a passed ball, and then both scored, when Kellogg made a two base hit between first and second bases. Kellogg scored on a wild pitch. Noyes was sent to first on balls, stole second, and reached third on Hunt's hit. Then Dann knocked a two base hit to left field, and both scored. Wagenhurst caught Cross's fly. A passed ball allowed Dann to reach third, and he scored on Spencer's three base hit to left field. Then this disastrous inning was closed, and in the seventh, Mercur returned to the pitcher's box. Stagg made a single hit, and then scored on Kellogg's hit, who, in turn scored on Noyes's hit. Yale scored her last run when Noyes crossed the home plate on a passed ball.

The rest and practice of a week made a great difference in the playing of Princeton, and the third Yale game was more evenly played. But for some reason Princeton seemed unable to hit Stagg when men were on bases, while at such critical moments, Yale was able to hit King easily. In the first inning, Reynolds made a safe hit, went to second on a passed ball, and came home on Duffield's hit to right field. In the third inning, Reynolds hit to third baseman, who fumbled and threw wildly, allowing Reynolds to reach third. Then Reynolds, scored on Evans' sacrifice hit. Durell got his base on balls, was forced to second and scored on Reynolds' hit. But Princeton scored no more—and Yale did; the final score being 9-3 in Yale's favor.

In the final game at New Haven, Yale again excelled Princeton, especially in fielding and base running. With two out in the first inning, Noyes went to third on an overthrow by Wagenhurst and came in on Hunt's hit. In the second inning, Dann took first base on a wild throw by Wagenhurst. Then McConkey was given first on balls, and so was McClintock, thus filling the bases. Stagg did the proper thing for Yale—made a three-base hit. Stagg himself reached home on Kellogg's sacrifice hit to first base. Noyes made a hit, stole second, took third on Hunt's hit to right field and came in on Durell's wild throw to Ford. In the fourth inning, Stagg knocked another three-base hit and scored on Noyes' hit. In the sixth inning, Stagg made a hit, went to second on King's wild throw, took third on Kellogg's sacrifice hit and came home on Noyes' long fly. In the seventh inning, Wagenhurst was given first on balls, stole second and went to third on Larkin's hit. Then Larkin stole second. Stagg tried to throw Wagenhurst out at home but only succeeded in giving Price first base. Price soon stole second and came home on McCance's two-base hit. McCance advanced to third on Mercur's hit and scored on Durell's hit. In Yale's half McConkey was given his base on balls, went to second on a passed ball, stole third and came home on another passed ball. In the eighth inning, Stagg went to first base on a wild throw of Price, stole second and went to third base on a wild pitch and then home on Noyes' hit.

And the game and the season closed; two defeats by Harvard and four by Yale. However, during the season, the nine of 1887 had played creditably, considering that it was largely made up of raw players.

There was another shift in the intercollegiate baseball arrangement this year, for Columbia had realized that she was outclassed and had withdrawn from the quadrangular league of last year. Yale, Harvard, and Princeton united together into a triangular league.

The season opened with a veteran team, only three places being vacant; so that we ought not to be surprised to find that "in the opening game the nine was free from all outward nervousness." In fact, the season opened too brightly, too brilliantly, and spectators, if familiar with Princeton's athletic history, ought to have been anxious—perhaps they were—but they seemed to have held in their criticism until the Harvard games, when the exultant shouts of early success were changed suddenly into wailings of defeat that lasted to the end of the season. It does not do for Princeton to start too well; her successes are won over obstacles, not over smooth paths.

During the Easter vacation, the nine played a great many games which developed the batting of the team, but proved a severe drain on the treasury. However, when the Yale game of April 28 was won, it was felt that this money had been well spent. A remarkable feature of this game was the way in which both Stagg and Mercur were batted, there being a total of sixteen base hits off Stagg and eighteen off Mercur. The victory was a surprise for it was hardly hoped that in their first game the Princeton nine, though composed of veterans, would be able to cope successfully with the veterans of Yale's victorious team of the previous year. The game itself was a splendid exhibition of ball playing and was marked by some brilliant plays, though marred by several inexcusable errors. In the sixth, Dann tied the score with a home run. In the same inning, the winning run for Princeton was made by King's hit to right field, on which he took second base and then third base on Dalzell's failure to field the ball. He finally scored on W. C. Price's fly which Hunt caught, but which he could not return in time to cut off King at the home plate. After the game tremendous excitement prevailed for everyone felt that a great game had been won; "the Princeton tiger would no longer be muzzled." Probably those who saw the game were carried away by the enthusiasm of the time, but when we know what this season brought forth, it is hard not to think that this victory was overestimated. Rather than regard this game as evidence of a complete departure from the policy or work of former teams, we are apt to apply to this season of 1888, what the Princetonian of 1888 said of the earlier seasons:

"The greatest fault in the playing of the nine which has represented the college in past years, has not been an inability to play ball but a careless, negligent refusal to play it when the circumstances of any game or of the whole championship series were not bright with hopes of success."

But the enthusiasm had cooled during the seven days of the following week, and the disappointment on May 5 was not so great as might have been expected, when Yale won, in the fifth inning, by her heavy batting, which brought in six runs. After this inning, Mercur went to centre field and King began to pitch and was so successful that Yale failed to score again, only making three safe hits. Princeton played a fine fielding game with three unimportant errors, while Yale made five, which almost counterbalanced her advantage in batting. Princeton's small score was due, in the first place, to her inability to hit safely at critical moments, though on the whole, her batting was very good, only six men striking out; and in the second place, to careless and over-daring base running. One man was caught napping at third base and four men were thrown out while attempting to reach the home plate. It was another contest of batting, proving that traditions of invincible pitchers in collegiate leagues may as well be laid aside, so long as each nine puts forth earnest effort during the winter to improve in that part of the game of ball known as "batting."

Of the Harvard game on May 7, the Princetonian says: "Notwithstanding the fact that Princeton made eight hits, while Harvard succeeded in getting only four, our men seemed utterly helpless to keep their opponents from making runs. Wild pitches and bases on balls, aided by costly errors in the infield, gave Harvard nine runs. We cannot attribute this defeat to pitching errors alone, for if there is anything that will cause a pitcher to lose faith in himself it is to see errors of the most absurd kind made by the team backing him. The men in the infield must learn that they are not expected to play the outfielder's game. There must be less grand stand play and there must be implicit obedience to the captain." This is harsh criticism but it helps to prepare us for what follows.

Five days later the same paper says: "Seldom has Princeton ever seen a game such as the second Harvard game of May 12. Only once during the game on our home grounds did Princeton get a man as far as the third and but four reached second base. We are strong on the outfield, weak on the diamond and at the bat. The slow play and several errors of our infielders at critical moments helped to swell the score of our opponents and a record of twelve strike outs was surely not productive of runs, yet we by no means can attribute this defeat to any one thing in particular. It was a trial of merits and Princeton was found wanting. In the first three innings, Harvard batted admirably and deserved the runs she scored while Princeton was unable to find the ball at all. After the third inning, the game was well contested, neither side getting a run, while the outfielders on both teams made some very pretty plays in capturing long flies."

Owing to the slippery condition of the ground, it was decided that the game with Yale, on May 26, should be an exhibition game, the championship game being postponed until June 5. The feature of the game was Stagg's pitching, "which has never been excelled on Princeton grounds." Twenty Princeton batters struck out and during the game Princeton made only two hits, while Yale secured thirteen. Yale had absolutely nothing to do outside of her battery.

Of the third Harvard game, the Princetonian says: "The exhibition which our team made against Harvard on Wednesday, May 30, was one that would have disgraced the lowest preparatory school in the country and for college men who have been playing ball for a number of years was absolutely disgraceful. The Princetonian realizes that the college has to support its team at every game and give them all the encouragement possible, but surely there is some excuse for a lack of enthusiasm where the third baseman makes five errors out of seven chances; the substitute shortstop, two out of three chances, while the rest of the fielders are not far behind. Mercur pitched a splendid game and had he been supported at all in the field, Princeton would have been the victor, instead of suffering an ignominious defeat. The backstop back of Ames was also all that could be desired. Harvard's fielding was by no means up to the standard and she relied, as before, entirely on her battery. She had the advantage of us in that fewer of her men struck out while a greater number of them succeeded in hitting easy grounders to our infielders which were just as good hits as far as runs were concerned."

In the fourth and final game with Harvard, on June 2, the old story was repeated again; while Princeton was ahead her men worked with a will, but as soon as Harvard took the lead, Princeton's men seemed to lose all power to play an aggressive game; and the final score was 2-7, in Harvard's favor.

On June 5, Princeton met her second defeat at the hands of Yale. Up to the seventh inning, the contest was close and interesting. Neither pitcher was hit very hard and both nines fielded well. Not a base hit was made on either side until the fourth inning, when Calhoun opened up the first half with a sharp hit to centre, which aided by a misjudgment of Watts, yielded a home run. Dann immediately followed with a three base hit, but was left on third by Hunt and McBride striking out. Princeton received her only run in the sixth, after two men were out. Price knocked an easy fly to second and Watts struck out. Then Wagenhurst made a hit, and came in on Durell's two base hit to right, but Durell was left on third by Dana striking out. The seventh inning was disastrous to Princeton. Hunt took first on an error of L. Price; McBride's fly was caught by Wagenhurst. Hunt went to second on a wild throw and came in on Walker's sacrifice hit. Walker stole second and third bases. McClintock took first base on balls, and Walker scored on Stagg's sacrifice. Watts caught McConkey's fly and McClintock came home. Calhoun went to first on a hard hit to King and Stagg scored. In the ninth, Yale scored three runs with two out. McClintock reached first on five balls. Calhoun fouled out and Ames threw the ball to Dana in time to catch McClintock, thus executing a very pretty double play. Noyes made a three base hit. Dann took first on balls. Hunt made a long drive to centre, which Watts misjudged, allowing Hunt to make a home run, giving Yale three runs.

In the fourth game with Yale, on June 16, the victory was Yale's from the start, and Princeton could only play a defensive game. Yale opened the first inning with six runs and there were only three innings in which she failed to score. Mercur was batted very freely in the first inning, and King was substituted in the second, but on account of a sore hand was not able to control the ball, and after one man had been put out, Young was put behind the bat and Ames went into the box. Considering the fact that Ames had not pitched a game this year, his work was remarkably effective.

Thus closed in defeat a season of bright promise, but over-confidence, and the veterans defeated in 1887 were the defeated veterans of 1888.

The nine of 1888 had failed to continue the good work of the early season into the championship series, with the exception of the first Yale game, because of the inharmonious relations between the captain and other members of the nine. There had been entirely too much politics in the selection of a captain; and the bitter feeling then aroused, did not disappear during the season. Several members wished to resign, but were prevented by loyalty to the College.

Championship won by Yale; Princeton third.

In order to arouse more interest in the class games of the fall, which proved such 'good feeders' for the 'Varsity nine of the spring, Professor H. F. Osborn, '77, and Mr. M. Taylor Pyne, '77, gave a handsome banner to the class champions of the fall of 1887, which was won by the class of '88.

The playing rules were materially altered this year in order, if possible, to improve the batting, and to reduce the effectiveness of the pitcher by affording more opportunities for brilliant fielding and base running.

The championship season opened on May 4, with an easy victory over Harvard. No fault could be found with Princeton's fielding in this game, but the men were not able to hit the ball at critical moments. The game itself was a strange mixture of wretched errors and brilliant plays, among which may be mentioned the unassisted double play of King and the fine fly catches of Durell and Knickerbocker.

But the batting had generally improved by the Yale game of May 8; in fact, hard, continuous batting alone saved Princeton from defeat, for her errors were sufficient to have lost any game. It was expected that this game would be a battle of pitchers, but to everyone's surprise both pitchers were hit hard, while the fielding was poor. As the score shows, the lead changed several times, and until the last man was out, it was anyone's game.

When Princeton met Harvard for the second game, on May 11, it was evident that Harvard had made a great improvement, while the playing of Princeton had deteriorated. Princeton tied the score in the eighth inning. Ames reached first on Dean's wild throw and came home when Osburn knocked a two base hit. Then Brokaw and Watts were put out, but Osburn scored when Evans muffed Durell's fly. In the tenth inning, Harvard had eight men at the bat, and made three safe hits and scored three runs. The loss of this game cannot be attributed to any one player, but to "the carelessness, overconfidence and nervousness of several of the team."

Everyone felt proud of the team's work in the Yale game of May 18, even though Yale won. From the first inning to the last man in the tenth inning, Princeton played a plucky uphill game. Starting with a lead of four runs to overcome, Princeton was ahead at the end of the fourth inning. Again in the ninth inning, when Yale led by three runs, the Princeton team took a splendid brace and caused the wildest excitement by batting out enough runs to tie the score. In the field, though the bases were almost constantly full, the nine played carefully and without nervousness. Yale won in the tenth inning, when a base on ball and two hits yielded her three runs.

On May 22, Princeton lost all chances for the championship with the defeat by Yale for the second time. Princeton's special weakness was in the throwing of the infield, which caused more than half of the errors. Ames pitched steadily, but was hit quite freely throughout the game. Brokaw did not catch as well as usual, because of the painful soreness of his hand. Stagg pitched a winning game from the start, and Princeton's small score is due to his work, no less than the fine support that he received. In the seventh inning, Cushing presented Princeton with their only run. Watts was given his base on balls, stole second base, and scored on Cushing's wild throw of Durell's grounder.

In the first inning of the Harvard game, of May 30, the outlook for Princeton was very gloomy, but by steady work the team slowly ran up the score, and in the eighth inning, Durell's timely single hit brought in two men, and won the game. Young's pitching deserved the highest praise. In the first inning, he allowed five hits to be made, but then he settled down, and during the remainder of the game Harvard secured only five more hits. The features of the game were the three difficult catches by Payne in left field, Durell's work in centre field and Brokaw's catching and throwing. In the eighth inning, Princeton earned three runs by the hits of Young, Knickerbocker and Durell, and King's sacrifice.

The loss of the Harvard game, on June 1, was due to poor base running and to two fumbles. The team played well until the seventh inning, when a base on balls, fumbles by Watts and Knickerbocker, and a base hit gave Harvard four runs. Young pitched in fine form. Up to the seventh inning, not a hit was made off him, and eight men were struck out. It seemed, in the eighth inning, as if Princeton would surely score. Young led off with a safe hit, and both Knickerbocker and Brokaw were sent to first on balls. With the bases full, King sent a long fly to Linn, but the runners failed to take advantage of this, and the next two men were put out at first base; leaving the final score 3-4 in favor of Harvard.

The last championship game, on June 15, was won by Yale, in the eleventh inning. It rained during nearly all of the game. Yale, though outbatted and outfielded, won the game by magnificent base running and a lucky hit in the ninth inning. It was a pitcher's battle, in which Young was decidedly superior, but his bases on balls and the three errors in his support were very costly. In the ninth inning, with three balls and two strikes called on him, Calhoun knocked a low fly to left field for three bases, and McClung's single hit brought in the earned run. In the eleventh inning, McClintock got his base on balls, stole second, and then third, and came home on Stagg's sacrifice hit.

Stolen Bases, Dana, Brokaw, McMillan, Stagg, Calhoun, McBride, McClung 2, Cushing 2, McClintock. Left on Bases, P. 5, Y. 6. 2 Base Hits, Stagg. Struck Out, by Young 7, Stagg 2. Bases on Balls, by Young 2, Stagg 1. Passed Balls, Jackson 2. Time, 1 hour and 35 minutes. Umpire, Mr. John Kelly.

The opening game with Yale, on May 3, was won by Yale through Princeton errors. In fact, all the runs on both sides were due to errors of the fielders, rather than good work of the batters. In the fifth inning, Yale made two runs by three hits and two errors by Princeton. In the ninth inning, Dana hit safely to left field, stole second and third bases and scored on McMillan's hit. But the other run needed to tie the score could not be made.

Earned Runs, P. 1. Stolen Bases, Owsley. Left on Bases, P. 3. Y. 3. 2 Base Hits, Watts. Sacrifice Hit, McMillan. Double Play, McClung, McBride. Triple Play, Cushing, Poole, McBride. 1st Base on Errors, P. 1, Y. 1. Struck Out, by Young 2, Stagg 4. Wild Pitch, Stagg. Passed Balls, Brokaw 1, Poole 2. Time, 1 hour and 30 minutes. Umpires, Messrs. Duffield of Princeton, Peters of Yale.

In the game on May 24, both Yale and Princeton played with an energy and skill such as is seldom seen, even among professionals. Princeton played with but one error and only three Yale men were able to reach first base. McMillan, in right field, caught seven flies, one of them a long foul fly over by the fence, which he caught just off the ground after a long run. In the third inning with a man on second base, Calhoun knocked a hot liner towards third base, but Watts prevented any scoring by a beautiful catch on short notice, jumping to catch the ball. The only run of the game was made in the eighth inning. Brokaw reached first base on a safe hit. McMillan sent a swift grounder to Calhoun, who then threw wildly to second base and both men were safe. A passed ball permitted each to advance a base, and then Young's safe hit to centre field allowed Brokaw to score.

Durell opened the Yale game, of June 14, by a safe hit, and then took second on Owsley's great catch of Payne's foul fly. Knickerbocker was given his base on balls, and then both scored when Dana hit to centre field. Dana himself scored on a low grounder to centre field which McClung misjudged. For Yale, Pelham got his first on balls and McBride followed him with a safe hit. Both scored when Payne failed to stop Porter's hit to left field. Later Watts fumbled Daltell's hit and allowed Poole to score the tying run. In the fourth inning, Stagg gave Durell and Watts their bases on balls, and when Knickerbocker knocked to infield, Stagg attempted to retire the side by putting out Watts on third, but only succeeded in allowing Durell to score. Watts scored on Dana's safe hit and soon two more runs were scored when Brokaw made a two base hit. This gave Princeton the big lead of four runs and everybody, except a few loyal Yale backers, thought Princeton was a sure winner; especially when she scored another run in the fifth inning on Dana's three base hit and a sacrifice by Brokaw. But in their half of this inning, Yale rallied and scored two runs on a forced hit, a wild throw by Durell, and single hits by McClung and Daltell, aided by exceptionally good base running. In the sixth inning, Yale felt more encouraged. Stagg hit safely, went to second on Calhoun's sacrifice hit, and to third on McBride's single hit. Meantime Calhoun had stolen second and when Poole knocked a safe single to centre field, they both scored. When McMillan came to the bat in the eighth inning, it began to rain and time was called. However, it soon stopped long enough for the inning to be finished and for Yale to escape defeat. The credit for saving this defeat belongs to Captain Calhoun. He took the most desperate chances in running bases, stealing second and then third, and he so surprised Brokaw by dashing home that Brokaw for a moment hardly knew what to do. The rain finally stopped the game completely in the ninth inning and the score reverted to the tie of the eighth inning, despite the fact that Princeton in this partial inning had scored one run, and two men were on bases, with only one out fielding prevented their scoring. It was in the last half of the third inning that the game took on its lively character and kept the rival stands in continuous uproar. Stagg started the fun. With two men out, he knocked a sharp bounding ball to Knickerbocker who fumbled the ball and then threw wildly. This proved to be a disastrous error.

"If Knickerbocker had retired Stagg, that player would never have had the opportunity to make a great sliding steal to second base; Calhoun would not have had a chance to send the ball over second base; McBride's slashing liner to right field would not have been dreamed of; Poole's bat would not have sent a daisy-mower to left field and Yale would not have taken the great lead of three runs."

To be sure the score was tied in the sixth inning, but Yale regained her lead. In the seventh inning, Murphy, the young substitute fielding McClung's place in left field, made a great running catch of a liner over second base that would not have been caught once in a hundred times. Had he missed it Princeton, with one man on first, would have gained the lead, for it would probably have been a home run. In the ninth inning, a base hit would have saved the game for Princeton as two men were on bases and Brokaw was at the bat. Every time before that he came up to the bat, he had hit safely. All depended on him. He knocked a hot liner to Calhoun. The latter stopped it. A mighty shout went up. But Calhoun had fumbled it. Brokaw made a headlong slide to get to first base. Calhoun recovered however just in the nick of time and Brokaw was called out.

There was an effort made in 1891 to resume athletic relations with Harvard. In April, Harvard made friendly overtures to Princeton, with a view of arranging at Brooklyn, June 18, 1890.

The last Yale game, on June 18, was one of the most exciting games ever played between Yale and Princeton. Princeton went first to the bat and was retired quickly, but Yale followed suit. In the second inning, Brokaw for Princeton and Poole for Yale made safe hits but sharp a series of baseball games. Princeton expressed her readiness to meet Harvard in alternate games upon the college grounds, but declined to enter any series to be played exclusively in New England, where, according to regulation of the Harvard Faculty, all Harvard games must be played. Yale then proposed a conference of Harvard, Princeton and Yale, because Yale found it very difficult to meet in succession two strong nines that did not meet each other. At first Harvard declined to attend, but later the meeting was held and a series of games arranged. For a time it seemed as if the triple league was again in harmonious inter-action. But for some inexplicable reasons the Harvard Base Ball Advisory Committee publicly cancelled the games, stating: "That the action of the Harvard undergraduates was without proper authority; in arranging the recent meeting in New Haven the officers of the Association lost sight of their restricted powers, and under the circumstances no games can be arranged with Princeton." As a consequence, Yale at once cancelled her proposed games with Harvard, and for the first time since 1868, these two rivals did not meet on the diamond. It is interesting to notice that in this season of 1891, the Baseball Association first became self-supporting, and the old custom of soliciting subscriptions among the Freshmen, was abandoned.

Earned Runs, P. 4. Stolen Bases, Payne 2, Dana, Calhoun, Cushing, Bowers. Left on Bases, P. 7, Y. 5. 2 Base Hit, Young. 3 Base Hits, Ramsdell, Calhoun. Home Run, Young. Bases on Balls, by Young 3, Bowers 1. Wild Pitch, Young, Bowers. Passed Balls, Brokaw, Poole. Time, 2 hours and 28 minutes. Umpires, Messrs. Golden and Hopkins.

In the game of June 15, Captain Calhoun led off for Yale with a three-base hit. Murphy was thrown out at first. Then Poole hit a hard, low "liner," but Young stopped it. However, it knocked him off his feet, and in his haste to get the ball to Brokaw, he made a wild throw and Calhoun scored. Poole stole second, and Cushing went to first base on balls, but both were left on bases, for McClung struck out, and Dana caught Beall's fly. Yale made her next and last run in the fifth inning. With two men out, Calhoun hit safely to second base; the ball was too speedy for Durell to handle. Calhoun attempted to steal second, and scored on Brokaw's wild throw, which went far out in the field. Princeton had taken the lead in the second inning. Dana made a safe hit to centre field, stole second base, and a moment later, trotted home, when Young drove the ball far over Case's head for a clean home run. In the next inning, Princeton strengthened her lead by another run. Payne made a safe hit, went to second on a passed ball, and by a very close decision, was given third on his attempted steal. Brokaw hit to right field, and Payne scored. No more runs were scored by Princeton until the seventh inning. Then Young made his third hit of the game, and went to second on King's safe, slow hit to Murphy. Now it was Ramsdell's turn. His hit over Case's head was nearly as long as that of Young in the second inning, but foolish base running put him out, and deprived him of the credit of a home run. Instead of sliding and making sure of the plate, Ramsdell ran right over it without touching the rubber. Poole chased him for fifty yards, and finally touched him out with the ball. With each succeeding inning, Yale's hopes sank lower and lower. Her men made desperate efforts, but when they reached first base they were either forced, doubled up, or thrown out at second. In the last two innings, Young's pitching was so effective that not a single Yale man reached first.

The first interesting game of the season of 1892 was the defeat by the University of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania played very well and Princeton played as though it was their first game of the season; indeed, they did not do so well as their first game with the New Yorks. They made five errors, and throughout the nine innings got one scratch hit. On the other hand, Pennsylvania batted Young hard and often, and seemed to find him at will. It was expected that the game would be very close, for the teams were really evenly matched, but Young gave the first man at the bat his base on balls, the second made a hit to right field which passed Spooner, and Pennsylvania scored two runs. Three weeks later, however, Princeton defeated Pennsylvania by the score of 8-1.

The season of 1892 marks the renewal of the Princeton-Harvard baseball contests, as the "New England" rule was repealed. On May 7, Princeton met Harvard on the diamond for the first time since June 1, 1889, and were outplayed, especially in batting, for Princeton got only three base hits while Harvard hit Young safely eleven times. The game opened with King and Young striking out. Mackenzie was hit by a pitched ball and went to first, but was put out while attempting to steal second base. Cook made a safe hit, and Mason reached first base on Brooks' fumble. Hallowell made a safe hit which brought Cook home. Frothingham made a sacrifice hit, but Mason was put out before he reached home, and a little later Hallowell was put out on third. Then Dickinson struck out, leaving Hovey on first base. Neither side scored in the second inning, nor did Princeton in the third, but Mason hit to Ramsdell and reached first base safely. Hallowell hit to Humphreys, who threw wildly to King, and Mason scored. At the beginning of the fourth inning, Young made a safe hit; Mackenzie went to first on balls and Ramsdell struck out. Then Wright was put out on a fly, but Young scored on an overthrow. In the fifth inning, Hovey and Hallowell scored on passed balls. In the sixth inning King got to first base on balls; Young was put out on a fly to second. Mackenzie went to first base on balls. Then Ramsdell made a safe hit and King came home. Wright made a safe hit, but Mackenzie was put out at the home plate. Then a wild throw by Highlands allowed Ramsdell to score. In the seventh inning, Mason made a two base hit, and a hit of Frothingham brought him in. Then Hovey hit to left field and Frothingham scored. Corbett knocked a home run, bringing in two runs. In the eighth inning, King made a home run and Mackenzie scored on a three base hit and a passed ball. Harvard scored two runs also in this inning on Hallowell's three base hit to right field, a muff by Brown and a low throw by Brooks.

On May 23, Yale defeated Princeton, in their first game of the season, by the remarkable score of 1-0. The batting on both sides was weak, but the work of the pitchers was superb. Several times the sides were retired by the pitcher who struck out the batter when a runner was on third base. Young excelled Bowers but he lost control of the ball in the fifth inning, and gave Bliss and Bowers their base on balls, thus forcing in the only run that was scored, and virtually losing the contest to Yale. Yale played an errorless game, despite the sharp batting of King, Trenchard, and Ramsdell. Princeton was prevented from scoring in the eighth inning, by a phenomenal play of Bliss. Brown had reached first on a safe hit, and then King knocked a long fly to deep right field. Bliss managed to catch it after a hard run, and then shot it like a bullet to the opposite corner of the diamond to Rustin, who put out Brown and saved the game for Yale.

In the Harvard game of May 30, Princeton scored the first run of the game in the second inning, on careless work by Highlands, aided by a safe hit of Trenchard. From the second until the ninth inning, no Princeton man reached second base. In the ninth inning, two of the three runs were scored on wild pitches by Highlands. But to offset this, Highlands caught two men napping at first base. In the first inning, Harvard had men on second and third bases with no one out, but Princeton played steadily and prevented them from scoring. Then the Harvard interest in the game lagged until the fifth inning, when Harvard began to understand Young's curves, and scored two runs on hits by Dickinson, Corbett, and Hallowell, a sacrifice hit by Highlands and a fumble by Ramsdell. In the sixth inning, Harvard should have been shut out despite the fact that Frothingham led off with a two-base hit. With two men on bases and two out, Guild muffed a thrown ball after Dickinson's hit, and two runs were added to the score. Corbett followed with a two-base hit, and Dickinson scored. In the seventh inning, Harvard filled the bases with three single hits, and all these men scored on Hovey's sacrifice hit, and Cook's two-base hit. Cook scored the last run for Harvard on a wild pitch by Young, and a muff by Ramsdell. Princeton scored three runs in the ninth inning on hits by Brown and Mackenzie, and a fumble of Cook, aided by two wild pitches.

In the Yale game of June 11, both sides scored in the third inning. Norton was hit by the pitcher, and Harvey made a sacrifice hit. Jackson made a safe hit, and when Mackenzie returned the ball to the home plate, Brown muffed it, and Norton scored. In Princeton's half, Mackenzie took his base on balls, and stole second. He advanced to third on Wright's sacrifice hit to pitcher, and finally scored on Ramsdell's safe hit. In the seventh inning, Case got to first on Ramsdell's error, and to second base on Brown's poor throw. He stole third, and Carter was sent to first on four balls. Bliss knocked to Ramsdell, who threw so poorly to Brown that Case scored. In the eighth inning, Harvey made a safe hit, stole second, went to third on Jackson's sacrifice hit to Young, and scored on Murphy's safe hit.

On June 18, despite her two former victories, Yale was defeated by Princeton by the score of twelve to two. King opened the game for Princeton by knocking a short grounder to third base, but Murphy slipped on the wet grass and the ball failed to reach first base in time. Young duplicated King's feat by making a bunt and beating the ball to first. Murphy overthrew second and King went to third. Mackenzie sent a grounder towards first base but Jackson was not quick enough to catch King at the home plate. Then Ramsdell knocked a home run, bringing in Young. For Yale, after Murphy had been put out, Beall was given his base on balls and went to second on one passed ball and to third on another. Brown was unable to hold Young's swift delivery and Bowers also was sent to first base on called balls. Beall scored on Case's slow grounder to first. In the fourth inning, with two out, Guild made a three base hit and Brown brought him home by a safe hit to right field. King was sent to first on balls. Young made a pretty hit but Bliss threw the ball home in time to catch Brown. In the fifth inning, an overthrow by Brown allowed Murphy to score. In the sixth inning, Case began to pitch but this seemed to rattle the Yale team and they went to pieces, allowing Princeton to score six runs. Woodcock led off with a safe hit, and Brooks got to first on a fumble by Murphy. Guild made a safe hit, and filled the bases. Then Brown was hit by a pitched ball and Woodcock was forced home. King hit safely to centre field and Brooks and Guild scored. After Young had been put out, Mackenzie hit safely to centre for three bases, and allowed King and Brown to score. Then a single hit by Wright brought Mackenzie in. In the eighth inning, Princeton scored two more runs on Mackenzie's single hit, a balk by Case, Ramsdell's base on balls, Jackson's bad fumble, and two stolen bases. The final score was 12-2 in favor of Princeton.

Stolen Bases, King, Trenchard, Mackenzie, Gunster. Left on Bases, P. 8, D. 8. Sacrifice Hits, Woodcock, Drake, Folsom, Griffin. 1st Base on Errors, P. 1, D. 1. Double Plays, King-Otto, Brooks-King-Otto. Struck Out by Drake 3, by Dartmouth 5. Bases on Balls, by Drake 7, O'Connor 1, Thornburg 8, Smalley 1. Passed Balls, Ranney 3. Time, 1 hour and 45 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Campbell.

At the end of the seventh inning of the Dartmouth game, the score was 5-1 in favor of Princeton, but that does not represent the closeness of the playing. H. Brooks, King and Arthur made a pretty double play. In the last half of the inning, there were two men out and three men on bases, when King came to the bat and lined the ball between centre and left field. It seemed to be a safe hit, but Dinsmore just got there and fell, but caught the ball as he lay at full length.

On April 29, Princeton defeated Cornell in an eleven inning game by the small score of 3-2. Cornell was superior in batting, but unfortunate in placing hits; Princeton was sure and steady in fielding, but unable to hit Priest. The winning run in the eleventh inning, was made by Blair, who reached first base on an error by J. Taylor, and went to second on Payne's sacrifice. Guild made a hit that advanced Blair to third. Drake hit to Johnson and Blair scored on a wild throw to the home plate.

The first game with Harvard, on May 6, showed up the faults of the Princeton men. They did not shirk chances and were not afraid of making errors, but on the bases they were nervous and appeared to be ignorant of what they ought to do and when to do it. Harvard won because she completely outclassed Princeton.

In the first inning, Hallowell and Abbott were given their bases by Gunster, who threw wildly. Hallowell was put out at second, but when Frothingham tried to steal second, Trenchard overthrew and Abbott scored. Then Trafford hit a long fly to centre field which allowed Frothingham to score. In the fifth, Abbott made a hit, went to second on a passed ball, and scored on Frothingham's hit to right field. In the sixth, King hit a hot liner past Cook, and Abbott failing to stop it, King went to third. Mackenzie got his base on balls but was caught napping. On this play, King should have scored, but he slowed up when near the plate and Mackenzie was touched out before King reached the rubber. In the seventh inning, Hallowell's grounder was thrown too high to first by Brooks and Woodcock dropped Abbott's fly, giving the latter two bases. Frothingham bunted a slow ball to Otto, who threw home, but too late to catch Hallowell. Cook made a hit which brought Abbott in. In the ninth inning, Abbott made a single hit and stole around to third. After King caught Frothingham's fly, Cook went to first on balls and Hovey's single hit brought in Abbott. Then Cook came in on an error of Brooks.

Though Lafayette put up a strong game against Princeton on May 13, and made a most creditable showing, they were defeated in the end. Halloway, who tried to make a double play in the third inning, put out his man at second base, but threw wildly to first. The ball went into a cellar window of McKeen Hall, and the

Princeton runner went around the diamond. Princeton played a beautiful game; and the final score was 3-2, in Princeton's favor.

The Yale game of May 20, was one sided and uninteresting. Carter, the Yale pitcher, struck out sixteen men, establishing the intercollegiate record. The Princeton team was decidedly weak, both in batting and fielding, and their hits were few and scattering. The first three men at the bat for Princeton, struck out. For Yale, Rustin hit a baby grounder to Drake, who threw him out. Beall hit safely to right. He stole second and got tangled up with Brooks, who stood on the base line, and Brooks sprained his ankle, Guild taking his place. Beall came in on a drive to short by Case. Case stole second and went to third on Stephenson's single to left. Mackenzie made a pretty running catch of Speer's fly and Case came home. In the third inning, Beall got to first on balls, stole second, started for third on Case's easy hit to short, and came home on Otto's bad overthrow to third. In the same inning, Princeton filled the bases, but Gunster struck out and the side retired. In the fourth inning, Speer hit through shortstop and was forced to second when Bliss took his base on balls. Carter hit over second, sending Speer and Bliss in, but Mackenzie put the third man out by a hard running catch. The one Princeton run was made in the sixth inning, when Woodcock drove a hard liner through Bliss's hands; he went to second on Bliss's second fumble and scored on Payne's hit over second. In the eighth inning, King reached first on Beall's muff and stole second; then he went to third when Woodcock's hit was slowly fielded by Arbuthnot. Mackenzie sacrificed and King tried to get home but was run back and put out by Arbuthnot.

The second Harvard game, on May 30, was far more exciting than was expected. Princeton started in with a kick and kept it up constantly throughout the game. A delay of one-half hour was caused by Captain King refusing to play with Murray for umpire. After Princeton had packed up her bats, Harvard yielded and Mr. Hopkins was chosen. While luck saved the game for Harvard, the umpire nearly won it for Princeton. Princeton opened the game by making three runs. This sent a chill down the backs of the Harvard men but things looked brighter when in their turn at the bat, the Crimson players piled up four runs by heavy batting. They increased their lead by two in the third and sixth innings. In the sixth inning, the umpire called two men safe and Harvard had the chagrin of seeing four runs scored against her, thus giving Princeton a lead of one. This lead was increased by one in the seventh inning. But then a base hit, a passed ball, and a forced run brought Harvard within one of tying the game. In the ninth inning, the spectators rose on the bleachers and cheered like wild men. Cook made a pretty hit. Sullivan hit hard to King, who put out Cook, but made a wild throw to first, and Sullivan went to third. Trafford hit hotly to second and Sullivan started for home. Trenchard muffed and the game was tied. Trafford meantime had gone to second. Frothingham sacrificed and sent Trafford to third. Then Hallowell hit to third and on Guild's error Trafford scored the winning run amidst the wildest of demonstrations.

Earned Runs, Y. 1. Stolen Bases, Trenchard, Woodcock, Beall. Left on Bases P. 9, Y. 3. Home Run, Speer. Sacrifice Hit, Humphreys. Double Play, Arbuthnot-Beall-Stephenson. Struck Out, by Drake 4, Carter 13. Bases on Balls, by Drake 3, Carter 3. Hit by Pitched Ball, Woodcock, Trenchard. Time, 2 hours. Umpires, Messrs. Curry and Mullen.

On June 10, the steady, effective pitching of Carter enabled Yale to beat Princeton. Princeton made but one more fielding error than Yale, and had one less battery error, so the total misplays were even, seven on a side. Princeton made seven hits, Yale only three; and Princeton had nine men on bases, while Yale had only three. The trouble was, Princeton could not hit Carter at the right time. In seven innings, Princeton got one or more men on the bases. In one of these, the side was disposed of by a double play. In the remaining six, Carter struck the next batters out. In the second inning Arbuthnot hit an easy grounder to shortstop. Gunster went for it, balking Otto, and the latter fumbled, giving the runner his base. Kedzie hit to left field, and got to first base before the ball. Arbuthnot had gone down to second on the hit, and kept on to third. Guild threw over to third base, and had Gunster caught the ball, the Yale man would have been out. Gunster, however, muffed it, the ball rolling out into left field. There was a chance for Princeton to score in the second inning. Woodcock hit safely to left field, stole second, assisted by Murphy's muff of Kedzie's throw that would have put him out if held. Humphreys struck out, but Kedzie dropped the ball and had to throw to first to get the man, while Woodcock went to third. But Gunster struck out. In the fourth inning, with one man out, Speer lifted a long fly to left field. Woodcock was playing well in and could not get the ball as it rolled out among the carriages. Before Woodcock got it back, Speer had scored. After that Woodcock played a deep field and caught several equally long flies. That ended Yale's scoring and not once thereafter did they have a chance to cross the home plate, only three men reaching first and none second. In the sixth inning, with one out, Trenchard bunted toward third and beat Carter's throw to first base. Then Woodcock duplicated the play. Humphreys sent a long foul fly, of which Case made a fine running catch, but it acted as a sacrifice, Trenchard reaching third and Woodcock second on the return of the ball. A base hit meant two runs and a tie score. Gunster was up. He was hit by a pitched ball and the bases were full. But then Otto struck out.

On June 17, in the final Yale game, Carter pitched for four innings, only giving two base hits and not a single run. Then he retired, as Yale had a big lead, and Davis took his place. This young man was wild, not mentally, but in the matter of getting the ball over the plate. He kept Kedzie jumping about like an acrobat and was batted rather hard. Yale played a stiff fielding game and took away every chance offered to make runs. Drake pitched fairly, but his support was so crazy that it is a wonder he did not lose his mind.

Yale scored three runs in the first inning on a base on balls, an error by Drake and a home run by Case. In the third, Yale secured three more, on Stephenson's single. Speer's home run, an error by King, a wild pitch and a passed ball. Singles by Case and Stephenson, Otto's error, and a passed ball yielded another in the fourth, and hits by Arbuthnot and Kedzie, two fumbles by Humphreys and Guild, and a wild pitch resulted in four more in the fifth. Kedzie scored in the seventh on Otto's fumble, Murphy's two base hit and Beall's sacrifice, while Stephenson got around in the eighth on a single, a passed ball and a two base hit by Speer. Murphy scored the last run for Yale in the ninth inning on his base on balls, a passed ball and wild throws by Humphreys and King.

Princeton was blanked for five innings. Payne opened the sixth inning with a hit. Then followed a hit by King, Mackenzie's base on balls, Beall's fumble of Woodcock's grounder, two steals, a two base hit by Humphreys and an error by Kedzie, all of which netted four runs. Payne scored again in the seventh inning on his two base hit, a wild pitch, and a sacrifice, while in the eighth, Humphreys hit for two bases and scored on a single by Gunster, who also scored on a base on balls, a steal and a passed ball. But all in all, "it was a tiresome game." In fact it was a tiresome season for Princeton.

The first important game in 1894 was the Harvard game, on May 5. Whittemore, the first Harvard batter, was thrown out at first by Brooks. Winslow then sent a humming grounder between Ward's legs and ran to third base before Ward could recover his error. A base hit by Dickinson brought him in and the first run of the day was Harvard's. Their supporters grew excited but quickly subsided for Paine's grounder was well fielded by Gunster and Stevenson's by King, and both men went out at first, retiring the side. King led off for Princeton, but Whittemore caught his grounder and he was out at first. Brooks followed suit with a fly to Dickinson, and though W. D. Ward made a good base hit he was left on second by Mackenzie rolling out an easy grounder to Whittemore and being put out at first. Princeton began to show her batting strength in the second inning. Payne led off with a base hit, Trenchard sacrificed and sent Payne to second. Altman got to first on Stevenson's error but was caught in the attempt to steal second. Williams then made the throng of Princetonians howl by knocking a home run far out over the right fielder's head. Payne came in on this hit and the score was two to one in Princeton's favor when the side retired. In the third inning, Ward struck out but Mackenzie quickly redeemed his side by another home run. The fence was all that stopped the ball and Princeton throats grew raw with yelling. In the fourth inning, Altman led off with a three base hit and scored Gunster's single hit. Harvard picked up in the sixth inning, her lucky inning. Whittemore, Winslow, and Dickinson each brought in a run, the last named making a base hit. Then Paine, Stevenson and Corbett went out in one-two-three order but the score had been tied and Harvard was happy. Princeton did nothing. This inning, Wiggins was replaced by Highlands and Princeton could not get a man to second base. The seventh inning told the story, for Harvard failed to get a man farther than the first base, while Princeton made runs almost at will. Highlands was batted all over the field and every man of the whole Princeton team, except Gunster, who struck out, and King, who flied out to Whittemore, brought in a run. Ward reached third base on an overthrow by Highlands, Mackenzie reached first base on a muff by Corbett and was forced to second, Payne getting his base on balls. With the bases full, Trenchard made a single hit, Ward and Mackenzie scoring, and Altman added a two base hit, bringing in Payne and Trenchard. Williams made a single bringing Altman in. Brooks made a single base hit, sending Williams to third base, himself taking second on the throw to third, and W. D. Ward tried for a home run, bringing in Williams and Brooks, but was himself caught at the home plate by the beautiful throw of McCarthy. Payne brought in another run, in the eighth inning, by good base running, while in the ninth, Highlands, for Harvard, surprised everyone by making a home run to left field.

Forfeited to Brown in 7th inning.

Earned Runs, P. 2, B. 3. Stolen Bases, King 2, Donovan 2, Lowrey, Millard. 2 Base Hits, Otto, Mackenzie, Altman, King, Ward. 3 Base Hits, Tenney. Home Run, Tenney. 1st Base on Errors, P. 3, B. 3. Struck Out, by Altman 1, Russel 8. Bases on Balls, off Altman 1, Russel 1. Wild Pitch, Russel 2. Hit by Pitched Ball, Payne, King, Otto. Passed Balls, Tenney. Time, 2 hours and 15 minutes. Umpire, Mr. Burns.

The outrageous decisions of the umpire and his extraordinary conduct in permitting the captain of the Brown nine to delay the game at his pleasure, compelled Captain Mackenzie to take his men from the field at the middle of the seventh inning of the Brown game of May 12, at Providence. In the first inning, Donovan was declared safe on Mackenzie's beautiful catch of his drive to left field, the umpire claiming that it was a pick-up. In the second inning, with two men on bases, Otto hit fairly to the third baseman, who fumbled and threw wildly to the home plate; Ward and Mackenzie scored, Otto going to second base. After the play had been completed, Otto's hit was called a foul. In the seventh inning, when the Brown team had delayed the game for several minutes, Captain Mackenzie requested the umpire to compel them to play; the latter allowed the Brown captain one minute to recommence play, but at the expiration of more than that time, he refused to award the game to the Princeton men, who thereupon left the field.

Hit by Pitched Ball, Arbuthnot. Passed Balls, Williams 2. Time, 2 hours. Umpire, Mr. O'Rourke.

The first Yale game was played on May 21, and in the beginning, it looked as if Princeton would win. For five innings it was a battle between Carter and Altman, with the advantage in favor of the latter. The Princeton batters found the ball readily, but scored only two hits, one by Ward in the second inning and another by Payne in the fourth inning. Ward was left on third, however, and Payne went out with Otto on a fine double play by Arbuthnot, Murphy and Stephenson. Greenway, who was seldom known to bat safely, made the only hit for Yale early in the game. In the fifth inning, Altman reached his base on balls and stole second. Williams and Gunster went out and King, the hope of Princeton and her batter, came to the plate. He hit the ball hard and it sailed out over second base, with apparently wings to carry it beyond Freshman Keator in centre field. "A home run" was the cry on all sides. Keator gathered himself and started for the ball, which just touched his fingers. Up it bounded and fell safely in his hands. In the sixth inning Princeton did her best work. Ward got his base on Keator's muffed fly and reached second. Arbuthnot fumbled Mackenzie's grounder which gave him first and Ward reached third. Payne sent a ball beyond Rustin's reach in right field and Ward, Mackenzie and Payne scored. Brooks made a base hit but was put out at second, with Altman at first, by Case, Murphy and Stephenson. Greenway got his base on balls. The next ball, Williams allowed to pass and Greenway went to second. A repetition of this sent Greenway to third. Rustin waited until he got the ball in a good place and then lined it out for a hit, Greenway scoring. Murphy reached first on Brooks' error, and Case hit safely in centre field and sent Rustin home. Stephenson intended to make a sacrifice hit but got his base on Brooks, holding the ball. Carter made a hit and the bases were filled. Keator sent a long fly into right field which Payne caught, and in fielding the ball, Case was put out at second. Murphy attempted to steal home after Payne's catch, but was declared out by O'Rourke for not touching the base after the ball was caught. Then Williams and Gunster struck out and King sent a high fly to Speer. Yale was soon again at the bat. Arbuthnot was hit on the arm by Altman and sent to first. Speer retired on a fly to Mackenzie and Greenway made his second safe hit, placing Arbuthnot on second. Rustin's single sent Arbuthnot home and Greenway to third. Murphy hit to Brooks who fumbled, and the bases were filled again. With the infield playing close up to the batters, Case hit an easy ball over second base and Greenway and Rustin scored. Murphy was caught at third and Stephenson batted a fly to Ward. In the eighth inning, Ward and Mackenzie were retired on easy fly balls to Carter and Murphy. Payne hit safely, but was left at first when Stephenson caught Otto out. Yale in her half got Keator, Arbuthnot and Greenway on the bases but the side went with Rustin's little grounder to King who fielded the ball to Otto. In the ninth inning, Williams made a safe hit, but was left on first. The out-fielders, barring Keator's error, played a perfect game. The fly balls were either taken after a long run or were batted so high that the wind carried them into most unexpected places. Base running, which is always a feature of college games, was entirely wanting, not a single player on either side attempting to run a second.

On May 30, Princeton met Harvard for the second time, but the result was not so welcome as that of the first game. For the first six innings, Princeton had but a single run to her credit, while timely batting, aided by a number of mishaps, had netted Harvard nine runs. Altman was batted out of the box in the first four innings and then Bradley took his place. He proved much steadier than Altman. Towards the end of the game, the playing became a little slack on Harvard's part and Princeton began to hit Highlands more freely so that at the end the score stood 10-4 in Harvard's favor. Harvard scored the first two runs in the second inning on a base on balls, a wild pitch, and timely singles by Corbett and Whittemore. In the fourth, Mackenzie scored the first run for Princeton; he reached his first on a fielder's choice, and scored on Otto's terrific drive to left field, a three base hit. Harvard retaliated with four runs. O'Malley judged Altman's pitching well and got his base on balls. Then Corbett repeated Otto's performance with another three base hit, and O'Malley scored. Altman pitched wildly and Corbett trotted leisurely over the plate. Highlands hit sharply to Brooks who made a bad throw, and the runner was safe. Whittemore bunted, and by fast sprinting, beat the ball to first. Cook's sacrifice to King advanced Highlands and Whittemore each one base. Dickinson tried to sacrifice, but good work by Altman spoiled the attempt. Scannell proved a timely hitter, however, and his hot grounder let Highlands and Whittemore score the third and fourth runs of the inning.

In the last half of the fifth inning, Harvard again profited by Princeton's misplays and her own effective hitting to pile up three more runs. Bradley had taken Altman's place and started in by giving a base on balls to Winslow. Williams became careless or rattled and let two balls go by, and Winslow got to third. Highlands' single sent him home. Williams seemed dazed by this and Highlands easily stole second and third while Whittemore got his base on balls. Williams made a foolish attempt to prevent Whittemore from going to second and as usual in such plays, the trick miscarried. Not only did Highlands score from third but Whittemore reached second. William's third passed ball allowed the runner to reach third base while Cook's pretty single sent him home for the third run. With the score now 9-1, in Harvard's favor there was little doubt as to the outcome. Still Princeton put up a sharp game and once or twice it looked as if the Harvard nine were going to pieces, but they rallied and finished strongly. In the seventh inning, Highlands weakened a little. Otto got his base on balls and Bradley's single sent him to second. Scannell tried to catch Bradley off first and made a senseless throw on which Otto scored and Bradley went to third. Brooks' single sent Bradley home. In the eighth inning, Harvard added one more to her score. Cook got his base and went to third on Williams' fifth passed ball. Then Captain Wiggins, who had struck out twice during the game, made a two base hit and Cook scored Harvard's last and tenth run. Princeton tried to pull out a victory in the ninth. They made one more run on a single, a sacrifice and Gunster's hit, but it was to no purpose, and both sides looked forward to the deciding game at New Haven, on June 6.

Princeton won the deciding game with Harvard, on June 6, at New Haven. Neither side scored until the fourth inning, when Harvard made four runs, and it looked as if the story of the previous week would be repeated. Highlands struck out, and Whittemore reached first, being hit by Altman. He went to second base on a wild pitch, and to third base on a passed ball. Dickinson then got his base on balls, went to second on a wild pitch, and both men scored on Paine's single. Wiggins hit safely, bringing Paine in, and ran home himself, on Brooks' error. In the last half of the fourth, Princeton got three men home. Ward and Otto reached first on balls. Ward stole third, and scored on Altman's hit; Otto came in on Williams' sacrifice, and Altman scored on O'Malley's error. In the fifth inning, a base of balls, single hits by King and Ward, and a three-base hit by Altman, assisted by Dickinson's error, netted four runs. Gunster added another run in the sixth inning off his own single, Cook's error, and Payne's single. The seventh inning brought another run for Princeton. Otto reached first on a single, and bringing in an earned run on Altman's three-base hit. In the eighth inning, Princeton completed her scoring by adding two runs. Ward, Otto and Altman each made single hits, and Ward and Mackenzie scored, after the latter had been hit by Highlands, and sent to first base.

The second Yale game was won in two brief moments by one man, Captain Mackenzie. He easily solved the great Carter's pitching, and twice, with Ward on first base, and one man out, he knocked a home run, scoring four runs. Bradley began to pitch for Princeton, but was very wild, and gave two bases on balls, both runners being advanced later by a sacrifice hit. But Speer hit an easy grounder, and the side was retired. Princeton went out in order, no man reaching first base in the first three innings. In the third inning, Murphy reached first on balls, stole second, took third on King's error, and scored on Carter's fly to Payne. In the first half of the fourth inning, Yale made two hits, but failed to score. Ward made a single, and Mackenzie knocked his first home run. In the sixth inning Mackenzie and Ward repeated this play and the second pair of runs was scored. This gave Princeton a good lead, and Altman was put into the pitcher's box. Carter made a three-base hit in the eighth inning, and scored on Stephenson's sacrifice hit. This ended the scoring, though Mackenzie reached second in this inning on a hit by a pitched ball, and a stolen base.

The deciding game was played in Brooklyn, on June 16, and won by Yale. Payne opened the game for Princeton by getting his base on balls, and King sent out a grounder which was fumbled by Carter, advancing King to second. Ward hit a sharp grounder to Case who was neatly bowled over by it; Payne scored and King advanced to second. Mackenzie struck out. Then Otto made a short line hit over second base and Ward scored. Bradley caught the ball squarely on his bat and sent it bounding between Arbuthnot's legs to left field. Otto scored and Bradley reached third. Brooks retired the side by striking out. This was an excellent beginning for Princeton, but Yale started off at a still more rapid pace. Rustin was hit by the first ball pitched and went to first. Murphy got his base on balls and then he and Rustin each advanced a base by a wild pitch. Case hit to right field. Payne fumbled the ball and it went rolling up the cinder track while Rustin, Murphy and Case scored. Carter sent a long fly to left which Mackenzie muffed, and Carter scored when Gunster fumbled Stephenson's hit. This made four runs and none out. Then Princeton collected her nerves. Speer sent a fly to first, Otto caught it and put out Stephenson who had started for second. Then Greenway struck out. Neither side scored in the next two innings despite Carter's beautiful three base hit. In the fourth Williams sent a slow grounder to shortstop and beat the ball to first. Gunster sent a hot liner past Carter to centre field, advancing Williams to third, and going to second. Payne was out on a foul fly to Greenway. King sent a long fly to centre field and Williams scored after the ball was in Greenway's hands. Ward made a short hit, the ball striking Carter and bounding away from him. Mackenzie sent a slow grounder to Case, who threw wildly and Gunster scored. Until the second half of the sixth inning, the men were put out in one, two, three order. But then Stephenson fouled out to Williams who caught the ball very near the grand stand and was warmly applauded. Speer got his base on balls. Greenway made a three base hit on which Speer scored. Reddington made a clean base hit to centre field, bringing in Greenway. Princeton made the mistake of changing pitchers in the seventh inning, for Altman was slow and heavy and Yale pounded him severely. The bases were filled but with two out. Greenway sent a fly to right field which King, after a brilliant run, caught. In the eighth inning, Yale had sized up Altman and started in to clinch her victory. Reddington made a three base hit over Mackenzie's head and scored on a base hit by Arbuthnot to left field. Arbuthnot went to second on a wild pitch. He was advanced to third by Murphy's hit. Case hit along the first base hit and was put out at first, but both Arbuthnot and Murphy had crossed the home plate before the ball was fielded to Williams. The final score was 9-5 in favor of Yale.

Yale won the championship; Princeton third.

The early scores for the season of 1895 show that the candidates were not "weeded out" until after the season had opened. Every one was given a good opportunity for showing his ability and the policy of choosing the team was very generous and thorough. Sixteen games were played before the Harvard game, on May 11, in four of which Princeton was defeated by Boston, New York, Baltimore and Georgetown. The game with Pennsylvania State College was won only in the tenth inning by a score of four to three. The only other game of close score was with Cornell, but was won in the eighth inning, when Princeton made three runs.

At the opening of the Harvard game, on May 11, Payne was given his base on balls and stole second. Scannell tried to throw him out but the ball went wild and Payne went to third. While Whitmore was throwing Ward out, Payne scored. Neither side scored again until the fifth inning, although in the fourth inning Harvard got two men on bases when only one man was out. But the next man struck out, and the third man was thrown out at first base. In the fifth inning, Highlands became "rattled." Wilson opened with a single hit to left field and took second, as Rand let the ball elude his eager grasp. Gunster was hit by a pitched ball. Brooks bunted along the third base line for a base and filled the bases. Easton's single hit that bounced too high for even the lofty Highlands, sent in Wilson and Gunster, but Burgess returned the ball so rapidly to second base that Brooks was retired at that base. Payne's single hit to right centre field sent Easton home. Payne went to third on Ward's base hit to centre field and scored on Bradley's fly-out to left field. Trenchard's three base hit to right centre field sent Ward in, and Trenchard scored when Otto knocked a two base hit to Burgess. Then Wilson struck out, retiring the side. Six runs had been made and five of them earned. Princeton got a man on third base in the sixth inning and in the seventh inning, but did not score again. Harvard scored one run in the eighth inning by Rana's base hit to left field, a steal, Whitemore's fly to Bradley, and Hayes' single hit to left field. Another run was added in the ninth inning on Burgess' single hit, a wild pitch, an out, and Stevenson's single hit.

2 Base Hits, Speer. Sacrifice Hits, Ward, Carter. Double Play, Ward Brooks-Otto, Quimby-Rustin-Stephenson. Struck Out, by Carter 7, Trudeau 4. Bases on Balls, by Altman 2, Carter 2. Time, 1 hour and 20 minutes. Umpire, Mr. J. O'Rourke.

On May 18, Princeton met Yale at New Haven in a wonderful game, at the end of which the score stood 1-0 in favor of Yale. Almost every inning brought out some play that saved a run. The teams were very evenly matched, and whatever advantage Yale had in the pitcher's box was counterbalanced by Princeton's strength in the field. Carter's arm gave out suddenly in the middle of the sixth inning, and Trudeau was put into the box, but Princeton found it harder to hit Trudeau's curves than Carter's. Princeton made one hit off Carter, but none off Trudeau. The game opened by Payne getting to first base on Rustin's error. Carter threw Ward out at first, and Altman's fly to right field was caught. In the second inning Otto knocked to Reddington who made a phenomenal catch of a hard long drive. Williams bunted and Carter threw him out at first. Then Gunster struck out. Brooks opened the third inning by reaching first on Rustin's fumble. Easton made a sacrifice hit. Payne struck out and Ward hit to Speer, who made a beautiful catch of a very difficult ball. Yale got two men on second base, but they were put out before reaching third base. Speer saved a run undoubtedly in the third inning by a long run and a good catch, and Easton saved a home run when he caught Carter's long fly. The ball had nearly reached the ropes—if it had been ten feet further away it would have —when Easton turned, after a long run, and caught it above his head. Carter was already on his way to third, and nothing but the catch would have saved the run. In the fourth inning, Bradley hit safely to first. Speer caught Altman's fly, Otto fouled out to Fincke, and Rustin threw Williams out at first. The fifth inning was short. Gunster fouled out, and Brooks and Easton were thrown out at first. Both teams failed to get a man even as far as first in the sixth inning. In the seventh inning, Altman struck out; Otto's fly was caught by Reddington, and Trudeau won hearty applause by striking out Williams. Then Yale's turn came. Trudeau's fly was caught by Bradley, and Stephenson's by Easton. After two strikes, Quimby received his base on balls. Speer was the next batter and, after two strikes had been called, he hit to Brooks. Brooks dashed forward, then stopped suddenly, and lost his balance and fell backward just as the ball bounced over his head, so close that it almost hit him. Quimby went to third at a ten-second gait, and Speer stopped at second just as Easton threw wildly to the plate. Carter shouted to Quimby, and almost pushed him home. Williams made a bad mistake in judging the ball. He should have remembered that Easton, out in centre field, was a left-handed thrower. One would suppose he would have known, therefore, that Easton's long throw home would curve to his right, and bound to his left. He seemed entirely to forget this, for when the ball came in, and it was a beautiful throw, he ran over toward it as it curved, and was not ready for the long bound. The ball passed, and the run was made by Quimby, though it must be said to Williams' credit, that he kept his head in an exciting moment, and prevented the second run very prettily, by catching Speer on the slide. It is in just such moments as these that games are won and lost, and there is no doubt, that at just such times as this, also, the fact that the nine was playing on strange grounds did have its influence. In the eighth inning, Trudeau gave Gunster and Brooks bases on balls. Easton was at the bat, and Payne, Princeton's best batsman, to come next. Brooks was apparently watching third base, when Greenway threw to first, and Brooks was caught a good yard off the base. It was a careless play, and a costly out. Easton struck out. Payne retired the side, by knocking an easy fly. Yale could not get a man to first base during this inning. In the ninth inning, Ward struck out, and Bradley got first on Fincke's fumble. Altman hit to Rustin, and a double play to Quimby, to first, closed the game. This was the second time that Yale had won from Princeton by this small score (May 23, 1892), and once Princeton was fortunate enough to score, while Yale was blanked (May 24, 1890). The features of the game were long flies, and there has seldom been a match which gave the fielders as much, as important, and as varied work as did this. Altman's pitching seemed to bring out flies, which distributed themselves all over the field, but there was not a muff to go to Princeton's discredit though the errors, such as they were, were costly. For Yale, Rustin's two errors, in the first and second innings, had a bad influence on his team, as a captain's errors necessarily always do, and they gave bases that might have been used to advantage if the batsmen of the Princeton nine had been capable of following them up with hits.

On May 30, Princeton defeated Harvard in a game that was too one-sided to warrant a detailed description. The Harvard supporters assign three reasons for the score. In the first place, Captain Whittemore sprained his ankle in sliding to second base in the second inning, and had to retire from the game. This completely unnerved the Harvard team, who from that moment began to play a "wretched" game. In the second place, Rand, the Harvard left fielder, made three "wretched" errors, that were responsible in the end for nearly all the runs made by Princeton. Finally, the umpiring of O'Rourke was "wretched" beyond description. This umpiring would not have made any appreciable difference in the Princeton score. Princeton played good ball from start to finish. The most remarkable feature of Princeton's playing came in the seventh inning when, with three men on bases, Bradley knocked a clean home run, adding four runs to the already large score. "The Princeton infield fully sustained its reputation as the best infield in any college nine. Twenty-nine chances without an error is a fine record." This gave Princeton the first two games of the Harvard series, and no third game was played.

On June 8, Yale won the second game of the series by the score of 9-8. For Yale it was an admirable piece of uphill work. For Princeton it was a game lost by poor work and a lamentable weakness at critical moments. The first game had been lost by a close point, and an error. The chances were in Princeton's favor. She was on her own grounds. And her record for the year of five games lost out of twenty-four, to Yale's nine out of twenty-four, was a good estimate, as far as such estimates go, of their relative strength. Both Yale and Princeton erred in the pitcher's box. Trudeau should have taken Carter's place earlier; and Wilson for Princeton should have begun the game, with Easton as change pitcher, and in case the regular catcher, Trenchard was compelled to leave, then Altman, who was the only man that could get along without Trenchard. Carter began to pitch the game for Yale. The second ball he pitched Payne knocked away out in right field for a home run. In the second inning, nine Princeton men came to the bat, and six of them crossed the plate from five hits and three bases on balls, after which Carter retired to centre field, and Trudeau went into the box. Princeton thought the game was over, but it was not. Trudeau gave only four scattered hits in the fourth, sixth, seventh and ninth innings; and in these innings but one run was scored, in the seventh by Ward's hit, and errors by Greenway and Carter. Yale began to pull out of the rut in the third inning, and by three base hits and two bases on balls off Easton added three runs to the score, making it, at the end of the third inning, 7-4. Then Altman was put in the box. Easton was badly "rattled," for he muffed his first chance, a high fly from Greenway, on account of which two runs were scored. Altman held Yale down well until the sixth inning, when three hits were made, and four runs scored. He nearly fainted from heat and overexertion, and should not have been required to pitch, for he had been out of the infirmary only for a few days. In the seventh inning, Wilson was put in, and pitched well, only one hit being made off his delivery. In the last inning, Princeton had another chance to win out, when Smith got first base on Rustin's error, and after Gunster, all the heavy batters were coming up. Captain Brooks, however, ordered Gunster to bunt, which he did, popping the ball into Quinby's hands, who threw it quickly to Stephenson, catching Smith ten feet off the base. And the championship pennant remained with Yale.

Yale won the championship; Princeton second.

The sixteenth game was a defeat by Cornell at Ithaca, on May 2. Cornell won the game in the tenth inning by heavy batting and the pitching of Young, who, Jack McMasters said, was the finest college pitcher in the box. When Cornell ran in five runs in the ninth inning, and tied the score the cheering was terrific. In the tenth inning, Cobb made a home run, and Johnson a two-base hit, and was brought home by a hit from Affeld. The disgrace of this defeat was, however, wiped out on May 27, when Princeton won from Cornell 22-0. Again it was a pitcher's battle, in which Altman excelled Young at all points. Young gave sixteen men their bases on balls, and was batted freely, while Altman held Cornell down to three scratch hits, and allowed but a single man to reach second base.

On May 9, Harvard was badly defeated at Princeton. In the second inning, two bases on balls and single hits by Gunster and Altman gave Princeton three runs, while Harvard failed to score. Bradley caught squarely on the bat the first ball thrown in in the third inning and reached the home plate before Clarkson could find the ball among the coaches in left field. Smith, Wilson, Gunster and Ward followed with single hits, then Altman's home run cleared the bases. Two base hits by Bradley and Ward, Gunster's home run, and a base on balls added four more to Princeton's score in the fourth inning. Paine now retired from the box, and Haughton took his place. In the seventh inning, Easton weakened, giving three men bases on balls, all of whom scored on Dean's three-base hit. Gunster's error, and hits by Scannell and Clarkson increased Harvard's tally to seven.

The next game of importance was the "13-0" Yale game on May 16. For six innings, Yale succumbed to Easton's curves in one, two, three order. Then, Letton batted out a lonely, solitary base hit. For this he was hailed as the hero of the Yale aggregation, and the supporters of both teams joined in giving him a hearty cheer. After the first few innings, Princeton bent every energy to shut out their rivals, while Yale struggled in vain to get one man across the plate. Easton, however, sealed their doom, by improving in his work. During the game he struck out sixteen men, while but two hits were made off his delivery. The Yale team played poorly at all points, making inexcusable errors and using poor judgment at critical times. Trudeau was batted for a total of thirteen bases, which netted six earned runs. Ward opened the game by getting his base on balls, stealing second base on the first ball thrown, and scoring on Bartlett's error. Kelly made a two-base hit to deep left field. Bradley followed with a pretty hit over third base, and Kelly scored. Smith made a single, stole second, and reached third on Twombly's overthrow to Hazen. Titus followed with a clean hit over third base, and was advanced to second on Gunster's sacrifice. Wheeler knocked a long foul fly, but Greenway caught it after a hard run. The story of Yale's batting is soon told. But twenty-nine men came to the bat, two reaching first, and one, second base. Bradley led off in the third inning with a clean hit to left field. Then Smith struck out. Titus batted an easy ball to Quinby, who tried to cut off Bradley at the plate. But Bradley completely bewildered the Yale team by a pretty exhibition of base running, and reached home on DeSaulles' overthrow. Gunster made a single hit to Greenway, and Titus scored on Twombly's error at the plate. Wheeler reached first base, and Gunster scored on Greenway's error. Easton knocked a single hit to centre field, and Quinby's error let in two runs. Ward struck out, and Kelly retired the side by knocking a fly into Greenway's hands. Princeton scored three runs in the sixth inning on three bases on balls, hits by Titus, Gunster and Ward, and Trudeau's error. The bases were filled in the seventh inning, but Yale's sharp fielding retired the team without runs. It was the most pronounced victory that Princeton ever won over Yale, and the most overwhelming defeat Yale ever sustained from any rival. Yale was outclassed, but, more remarkable, the nine went to pieces; they made nine errors. Their general play was unaccountably loose; they muffed and overthrew bases. Only three times did they get more than three men to the bat in one inning, and only two reached second base.

Princeton was defeated by the University of Virginia on May 20. Virginia took the lead in the first inning by scoring three unearned runs on errors by Titus and Wheeler, and a medley of hits and errors in the fifth inning swelled it to seven. In the eighth inning, Princeton almost overtook the Virginians by bunching three hits which, together with errors by McKim and Craig, netted them four runs. In the last of the ninth inning, Easton made a single hit to left field, and Altman took first on balls. Kelly batted out a long hit to deep centre field which McCraney prevented from being a home run by a sensational catch. Bradley followed with a hot liner over third base, which Hoxton took in by a superhuman effort, and caught Altman off his base.

The second Yale game at New Haven was won by Yale on May 23. Yale scored three runs in the first inning. Keaton made a single hit, Greenway got to first on balls, and both scored on Letton's two-base hit. Letton came in on Gunster's error. Princeton scored in the second inning on Bradley's single hit, a steal, and Quinby's error. Yale made two runs in the fourth inning on Smith's base on balls, and single hits by Jerrens, Trudeau and Quinby. The excitement was very intense in the fourth inning, when Princeton tied the score by making four runs on a base on balls, an error by Quinby, Titus' three-base hit and Gunster's single hit. It looked as though Princeton was just starting on another thirteen score. Greenway was substituted for Trudeau, and saved the game. Yale scored one run in the fifth, when DeSaulles was hit by a pitched ball, and stole second base, coming in on Ward's error. In the sixth inning, Yale scored again on Trudeau's single, and errors by Kelly and Wheeler. The last innings were closely fielded, and there were few chances to score.

On May 30, Princeton and Harvard met in a sixteen inning game, full of hard chances and brilliant playing. The playing on both sides was of the first order, and many of the errors were made on excusable chances. Three thousand people saw the game, and as the play progressed the excitement was at fever heat. The last innings were played in an alternation of breath-holding and wild cheering. Easton started the game in the box for Princeton, but after a succession of hits and errors he was replaced by Wilson, who received wonderful support from Titus. Wilson pitched a masterly game to the end of the sixteenth inning, and Princeton's victory is due in no small measure to his work. Harvard, after she had retired Princeton in the first inning, started in with a rush. With one out, Scannell knocked a three-base hit, scoring a moment later on a base hit by Burgess. Haughton knocked a two-base hit, while Rand went to first on balls. A safe hit and two wild throws by Easton made Harvard close the inning with five runs to her credit. Both nines drew blanks until the fifth, when Princeton got four men across the plate. Altman and Wilson each made single hits. Suter got to first, Easton hit to right field for two bases, and Bradley made a single hit, all yielding four runs. In the eighth inning, Princeton tied the score, Easton scoring on Paine's error, Bradley's sacrifice hit and a wild pitch. For five exciting innings neither side could score. It was in the fourteenth inning that Princeton increased her score. Single hits by Wheeler, Easton and Bradley yielded one run, but this lead was only temporary, for Harvard, in her half, tied the score again, Clarkson getting a base on balls, and scoring on Haughton's three-base hit to left field. This ended Harvard's score-getting, though they had men on bases in each of the succeeding innings. In the sixteenth inning, with one man out, Ward knocked a two-base hit to left field, Wheeler followed with a safe hit that sent Ward home, while Wheeler scored a moment later on Chandler's error of Bradley's hot grounder. Princeton exhibited the quality she had not hitherto revealed this season, viz.: ability to play a steady, up-hill game, and the one she has lacked to make her nine the strongest of the year. Princeton was not rattled by the poor beginning.

The third Yale game was played at Princeton, on June 6. In the first inning, Easton reached first on Quinby's error, Bradley was given his base on balls, and Kelly sent Easton home on a single hit. Gunster was hit by a pitched ball, then Altman sent a long fly to left field, and on the put-out Bradley scored. Princeton made another run in the second inning on a single hit by Wilson, and a bad error by Greenway. Sankey hit a little bouncer to the pitcher and the latter, with plenty of time at his command, threw the ball away over first baseman's head, and Wilson easily scored. The game was interrupted for twenty minutes in this inning by rain. When play was resumed neither side scored until the fifth inning, although Yale nearly scored in the fourth. Greenway led off with Yale's first base hit, Letton hit to Wilson, who followed the Yale pitcher's example. It seemed as if Yale would surely score on the error. But Sankey was backing up first base, and succeeded in catching the wild throw. In the fifth inning, Princeton scored her last run. Bradley made a safe hit over first, and took second on a wild throw by Murphy. A second later Kelly hit a very hard liner past the pitcher and Bradley scored. In the last half of the sixth, it looked as if Yale would score. Murphy went out on a fly to Ward. Then Greenway hit a hot liner to left field and took first. He made a dash for second, and on Smith's wild throw, ran around to third. Letton struck out. Then Wilson grew wild and gave Quinby and DeSaulles their bases on balls, filling the bases. There they stood like ten pins, while Smith ignobly struck out. There was no more scoring on either side, though many interesting chances. The final score was 5-0 in favor of Princeton.
